TAMWORTH GIRL DISAPPEARS

MISS BLANCHE YORKE MYSTICALLY DISAPPEARS.

Miss Blanche Yorke, a popular well-known dress-maker, whose home is a short distance from Tamworth has been missing from her home July 8th, and county police office together with a Provincial detective actively engaged in looking for her.

Her last known appearance was in the office of Dr. Robinson in Tamworth, on the evening of July 8th, between the hours of 8.15 and 9.45. Robinson is a young physician, has been in Tamworth for six months. He declares that the young lady came on him for treatment for stomach trouble. He says that he examined her and gave her a bottle of medicine and that she left the office some time after nine o'clock. The medicine given to her he says contained strychnine. The entire bottle, if taken at once, he says, would be sufficient to kill her. A possible clue as to the mystery was given by a doctor, who states that next morning he found that a bottle containing about fifty carbonate of mercury tablets, of which one would be sufficient to cause death, was missing from a shelf near where he had examined a young woman.

Dr. Robinson says that she was in his office at 8.15 and left after 9. He did not see her afterwards. Yorke was not missed until Saturday night. Her parents, who reside in the country a short distance, thought that she was staying with the person for whom she was working, Dr. McGregor, the young man who has recently married the girl, came at her home Saturday night, and finding her went to the Walsh residence. Not finding her there he raised alarm, and search parties have been searching for her since, but up to Saturday evening no trace of her had been found.

Every effort possible has been made to locate her. With the circulation of stories which became grossly exaggerated as they travelled from tongue to tongue, a search was made of Robinson's home by A. B. Carse, and Henry Richardson, Provincial Detective Miller, who arrived on Saturday Monday, on being requested some one to search the house went through it.

Three theories have been presented. These are that the girl has met some foul play at the hands of some known person, that she has done away with herself, or that she has been taken from the vicinity to some place, because of a position in which the young woman is alleged to have found herself.

NOTORIOUS FENIAN AT LAST RELEASE

AFTER FOURTEEN YEARS IN KINGSTON, DYNAMITARD IS SET FREE.

Kingston, July 12.—"I'm a lucky man all right." This remark came from Luke Dillon, alias Carl Dullman as he passed out of the big gate of the penitentiary Saturday afternoon after being given his release. Dillon was a life convict. Release came about after a fight lasting two years. He was the leader in the Wella canal dynamite outrage of 14 years ago. Since May, 1900, he has been in the penitentiary, having been given life sentence. Dillon belonged to Philadelphia, Pa., and there was engaged in the shoe-making business, and with two other men, Nolan and Walsh, aimed to strike a blow at Canada behalf of Fenian organizations in the United States. Their game was wrong and all three landed in the penitentiary. Dillon's plans were foiled, but had they been successful the would have been great loss of life a Canadian shipping would have suffered a great deal. After entering the penitentiary, Dillon declared his object in making the attempt on the canal was not to cause loss of life but to deal a blow at England, which the Clan-na-Gael hated.

HELPED GOVERNMENT.

For the past two years great effort were put forth to secure his release and the sum of $50,000 was subscribed. Dillon's part against the murderers in the celebrated Dr. Cronin case (Chicago), went a long way in influencing the Canadian Government to free and deport him.

During his long stay in the penitentiary his conduct was good and it was reported to Hon. J. C. Doherty.

The ex-convict was taken on the steamer America by two guards and local clergyman accompanied the guards as far as Cape Vincent where Dillon was placed on American soil and allowed to go his way. He is in fine health; his long stay in prison has not affected him much.

Lords May Give Amending Bill Th Reading To-day.

LONDON, July 14. — The report stage of the amending Home Rule has been concluded, and the House of Lords will to-day consider third reading. Optimistic feeling prevailed in Parliamentary circles tonight as the result of the latest discussions in the Upper House regarding the prospects of a settlement acceptable to all parties concerned. This hopeful feeling was particularly evident among the members of Commons, in the lobbies and on Terrace last night.

Among the many amendments proposed yesterday was one by Lord Weardale, a Liberal peer and a Home Ruler, who believes that civil war can only be avoided in Ireland the exclusion of the Province of Ulster for the time from the Home R scheme. The object of his proposal was to enable a poll to be taken the whole of Ulster on the demand one-tenth of the electors in any of Ulster counties on the question the temporary exclusion of the province. He saw no possibility of compromise except by giving no option to the whole of Ulster, was willing to consider whether majority should not be two-thirds, believing as he did that in a very short time a very large proportion of people of Ulster would be conciliated to Home Rule.

Lord Crewe found it impossible give what he termed "formal" support to the amendment. Lord Lansdowne thought the suggestion a bit late.

Without further discussion amendment was negatived without division.

The Earl of Ellesmere died yesterday in London, at the age of 67. He succeeded his father in the title in 1862, and his heir is his eldest son, Viscount Brackley, aged 42.

During an electric storm lightning struck the barn of Wesley Love, near New Dublin, Ont. The building with its contents was entirely consumed. The insurance will not nearly cover the loss.

Samuel Mainguy, 50, was instantly killed about nine o'clock yesterday morning by a C. P. R. train passing a level crossing at the foot of Bell Hill, a suburb of Quebec. He was returning from a funeral.

William Batch, an Englishman, and South African veteran, fell from a G. T. R. freight train coming into Brockville. When picked up it was seen the cars had run over his left leg, which was amputated later below the knee.

ORANGEMEN CELEBRATE.

St. Thomas and Perth Are Scenes of L. O. L. Demonstrations.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., July 14.—That "Abolish the bar" was not the issue in the recent Ontario elections and that the Liberal party met defeat because it was feared that if they were returned to power bilingualism would be introduced into the schools of the province, was the contention of Mayor Hocken of Toronto in addressing a big Orange demonstration here yesterday. He also ascribed the increased Liberal vote in Manitoba to the belief on the part of the electors that if the Roblin Government were returned separate schools would be forced upon the province.

Big Day at Perth.
PERTH, July 14.—Fully ten thousand people came to Perth from eastern Ontario yesterday to celebrate the 224th anniversary of the crossing of the Boyne. It was the largest demonstration of Orangemen seen here in many years, and the procession was over a mile and a half long.

Farmer Dead In Bed.

CHATHAM, July 13.—William Daveson, a well-known farmer and market gardener, was found dead at his home. Daveson had been in the habit of sleeping in the shed at the rear of his house. Yesterday morning when his relatives went out to waken him they found him dead. Heart failure was the cause. Coroner Bray decided an inquest was unnecessary.

BUFFALO, July 14.—Judge J. Hazel, in the Federal Court here today, appointed receivers for United States Light & Heating Co. $17,500,000 corporation engage the manufacture of car lighting heating apparatus.

The application for the receivership was made by Fred. R. Hump one of a committee of three appointed last December by minority stockholders' committee to investigate operations of the company since incorporation.

In his petition for the receiver Mr. Humpage said the company solvent and will continue so if properly managed. He criticized one of the acts of the board of directors, which, he alleged, dissipated funds of the corporation in high unnecessary salaries, such as $10 a year to Chas. A. Starbuck, of York, as chairman of the board of rectors.

His Health Will Be Chief Weapon Against Tuberculosis.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 14.—The welfare of the child is to be the most important phase of the tuberculosis campaign in the future was the opinion of some of the leading physicians at the opening session of the 14th annual convention of Canadian Association for the prevention of tuberculosis yesterday morning at the Technical College.

Dr. Holbrooke, of Hamilton, emphasized the point that the root anti-tuberculosis work is the well of children and the prevention of infection. Children did not die of tuberculosis until they grew up between the ages of fifteen and twenty years.

Captain Kendall Will Have a Ashore, Says Report.

MONTREAL, July 14.—Captain Kendall, who commanded the press of Ireland, is not likely to go to sea again, though he was exonerated by the Dominion Wreck Commission in its finding on the disaster Saturday. It is understood here that the C. P. R. authorities have given him several months' leave of absence, and that at the conclusion of it he will accept a shore position either in Canada or in England in service of the company.

Carried Up by Balloon.

UDINE, Italy, July 14.—While soldiers were holding a dirigible balloon by ropes yesterday a sudden gust swept it from the ground. Nine soldiers let go, but the tenth was carried up. The crew of the dirigible made efforts to haul him aboard, but he fell from a height of 500 feet and was killed.

NO TROUBLE IN ULSTER

"Twelfth" Passes Without Any Friction in Belfast or Derry.

Celebration of Anniversary of Battle of the Boyne Is Marked By Vigorous Speeches at Drumbeg and Sir Edward Carson Pledges His Followers to Resist Home Rule Bill at Any Cost.

LONDON, July 14.—The recognition of the danger inherent in the existence of two armed volunteer bodies seems to have imbued Irishmen with a sense of added responsibility, and the battle of the Boyne was commemorated yesterday in Ireland with tremendous enthusiasm. But there was a more noticeable absence of disorder than on past occasions of this kind.

Following the custom a great procession marched from Belfast to Drumbeg, where Sir Edward Carson, the Ulster Unionist leader, made his now familiar speech defying the Government either totally to exclude Ulster from Home Rule or come out and fight.

Lord Londonderry at Enniskillen and Walter Hume Long, Unionist member of Parliament for Strand, at Garvagh, made speeches in a similar vein to other big demonstrations of Ulstermen, but no disorder was reported at any point up to a late hour last night.

Rival Nationalist and Orange processions at Glendermoat reached the stage of jeering at each other, and for a few moments it looked like trouble, but the police succeeded in keeping them apart until the danger was passed.

One feature of the situation seems to be that while Sir Edward Carson and other leaders are using unrestrained language, both Ulstermen and Nationalists are showing admirable self-control. Another feature is the more defiant the Ulster leaders speeches become the more pronounced becomes the feeling among the members of Parliament on both sides that a satisfactory compromise will be reached.

Premier Asquith announced in the House of Commons yesterday that the present session of Parliament would come to an end about the close of August, and that the new session would begin in early winter, which is thought to mean December. Before the present session ends, the Government will introduce its proposals for the reform of the House of Lords.

Carson Pledged Covenanters.

DRUMBEG, Ireland, July 14.—The Orangemen's demonstration here yesterday culminated in a scene of immense enthusiasm around the tiny platform where Sir Edward Carson, Bible in hand, pledged the covenanters never to surrender to coercion, to remain loyal to the throne, and never to waver in their support of their leaders in the fight against Home Rule.

Sir Edward Carson, in a speech which evoked tremendous enthusiasm, served notice on the British Government that unless it was prepared to leave Ulster alone it would very shortly find the Ulstermen recognizing no government except the Provisional Government of Ulster. He said he had been given authority to act, and if necessary that meant he was to exercise his powers without regard to consequences to himself. The Ulstermen, he added, were not going to give way and were bound to win, because God would defend the U. S. Commission Flays New Haven Directors.

Report of Investigation Into Affairs of New England Transportation Corporation Declares That Men Who Manipulated Accounts and Grossly Deceived the Public Were Criminally Negligent.

WASHINGTON, July 14. — The story of the "reckless and profligate" financial operations of the New Haven Railroad, one of the most remarkable chapters in the history of the American railroad and American finance was revealed in part yesterday by the Interstate Commerce Commission in a report to the Senate of its investigation of that road. It told of millions used like stage money, of corporations as pawns in a monster game with all New England's transportation as a prize, which led the New Haven in the ten years just passed, from the height of prosperity to the point where a dividend has been passed, where a dissolution suit is threatening, and where criminal indictments of many of the directors who figured in its deals are at least a possibility.

Hampered by unwilling witnesses, by burned books, and by all the mazes which lawyers invented to cover the trail, the commission estimated that in the progress toward a monopolization of New England transportation the New Haven stockholders have lost between $65,000,-

He said he had been given authority to act, and if necessary that meant he was to exercise his powers without regard to consequences to himself. The Ulstermen, he added, were not going to give way and were bound to win, because God would defend the right.

Sir Edward Carson offered the Government the alternatives of giving Ulster a clean cut out of Home Rule, or of coming to fight the Ulstermen. These, he said, were the only possible alternatives. Ulster, he concluded, was claiming only justice, and if it did not get it from the Government, would take it for itself.

Opened With Cannonade.

LONDONDERRY, Ireland, July 14.—The Orangemen here began the celebration of the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne with a cannonade, during which they projected their explosives so that they burst over residences in the Roman Catholic section of the city. The Nationalists, believing the cannonade to be the prelude to aggressive action on the part of the Orangemen, organized for defence, but no collision between the two parties took place.

Many German Soldiers Sunstruck.

BERLIN, July 14.—Two German soldiers died and over 100 others are ill to-day from sunstroke by which they were affected Sunday during military manoeuvres at Frankfurt-on-the-Oder, according to The Tageblatt. The men belonged to the Second Prince Charles of Prussia's Brandenburg Infantry Regiment, commanded by Col. Von Reuter, who was transferred from Zabern, Alsace, after the recent conflict between soldiers and civilians there. The weather was the hottest experienced in Germany this year.

Mersey Dock Workers Strike.

LIVERPOOL, July 14.—A strike was started yesterday among the Mersey dock employees with the object of enforcing recognition of the workmen's unions and bringing about the establishment of a joint board of workmen and employers to deal with disputes.

While the strike was not general, many of the power stations were rendered idle and several liners were imprisoned in the docks owing to the impossibility of opening the gates.

In return, the report said they have on their hands properties which pay no dividends, which eat into the earnings of the parent road, and which will be a burden on its capacity for many years to come.

The report deals with the management of the New Haven under former President Charles S. Mellen, and of the present directing head. Chairman Howard Elliott and Walker D. Hines, special counsel, says "they have cooperated with the commission and rendered it substantial assistance throughout this investigation."

The combination reared by the hands of Mr. Mellen, and approved by the late J. Pierpont Morgan and William Rockefeller, the commission finds to be clearly in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, and a monopoly in practical control of the transportation of five states.

The commission's report is unusual in the manner in which the directors of the New Haven are scored for their deeds. It speaks of criminal maladministration and negligence, asserts with positiveness that the directors knew they were perfecting an illegal combination, and says that the dream of a transportation monopoly was unsound and mischievous. The New Haven, the commission says, employed dummy directors, manipulated accounts, used questionable methods in increasing its own stock, paid the dividends of subsidiaries to make a showing, and used many other devices to deceive the stockholders and the public. It dipped into politics, was a factor in "invisible government," made large campaign contributions to the two dominant political parties, bought officials and tried to distort public opinion. All this it did, the commission says, "to carry out a scheme of private transportation monopoly imperial in its scope."

HUERTA REPAIRS ROAD.

Mexican Dictator Probably Thinks He Will Have To Use It.

VERA CRUZ, July 14.—Four hundred laborers, acting under orders from Mexico City started work yesterday repairing the gap in the Mexican Railway, connecting Vera Cruz with the capital, and the rushing of the work is believed here to indicate a possibility that the first train to pass over the repaired road may be the special conveying Gen. Huerta and his family to the coast.

Quantities of rails and ties have been hauled to the break, a little over six miles from the city of Vera Cruz, and the two miles stretch which has been without rails since April 21 will be restored to working order within two days at the most.

Passengers who arrived from the capital yesterday reported an extraordinary session of the Senate there on Saturday, but said no announcement had been made as to the matters discussed behind locked doors. They said, however, the session was followed by a conference between several Senators and Francisco Carbajal, the new Minister of Foreign Affairs.

THE VIA DOLOROSA.

Jerusalem's Queer Old Street Is a Mecca For Pilgrims.

"The Street of Pain," or the Via Dolorosa, in Jerusalem, is rightly described as the most sacred thoroughfare in the world.

Through it hundreds of pilgrims every year slowly and tenderly linger over its stones as they follow 's zigzag course to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, firmly believing it to have been the way our Saviour walked to suffer an ignominious death for the sins of mankind.

During Holy Week, especially, it is crowded with Russian pilgrims, many of whom painfully make the journey upon their hands and knees.

The Via Dolorosa really consists of four streets, which exhibit every characteristic formation of the streets of Jerusalem; the narrow arched passage, the open way with the latticed windows, and the steps that show the rise and fall of the hills on which the city is built.

Fourteen stations mark the various episodes which are supposed to have distinguished the painful journey of our Lord, commencing with the traditional "Palace of Pilate," now the Serai. The so-called holy steps, Scala Sancta, from the Judgment Hall, were removed to the Church of St. John Lateran at Rome, where they may now be seen. Near the Serai the narrow road is spanned by an arch, known as the Ecco Homo Arch.

According to a monkish legend, it marks the spot where Pilate said, "Behold the man." It is part of a triumphal arch of Hadrian, and near to that part of it built in the School of the Sisters of Zion, on the right-hand side, are some curious stone cylinders of solid rock of undoubted antiquity, on which the town crier used to stand when proclaiming the loss of certain articles or announcing some particular event of public interest.

Through the arch the street passes the Austrian Hospice at the bottom of the hill, then crosses another street at an angle, leaving the "House of Dives and Lazarus" on the left hand, and ascends the next hill through arches and a vaulted passage, crossing the street from the Damascus Gate before it reaches the German Hospice. Then mounting step by step higher up the hill, turns at right angles through the vaulted roof of a prolongation of Christian street, where an old entrance to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre stood.

Various crosses and other religious emblems serve to remind the pilgrim of the sacred spots along the route; the place where Christ sank under the Cross, and where Simon of Cyrene was called upon to bear it; where Jesus leaned against the wall for support; where Veronica wiped the sweat from His brow, and His features became imprinted on her handkerchief; and the many other holy places that are annually kissed and wept over every Easter.

The last four stations are in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre itself. It should be added, perhaps, that it was not until the fourteenth century that these sacred sites became known, and there is no historical evidence whatever to prove their identity. Indeed the destruction of Jerusalem under Titus was so complete, that neither streets nor houses could be identified afterwards.

Nevertheless thousands of pilgrims visit the Holy City and follow the road which Christ is said to have followed on the way to Calvary.

THE DOUBLE GAME OF HUGHES.

How Hon. Sam Hughes Tries to Hoodwink Both the Orangemen and the Roman Catholics—His Critics are "Fanatics," Says Borden Minister.

Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, in the Borden Government, continues in his attempt to hoodwink the people in regard to the petty subterfuge which he employed in the endeavor to get out of the political difficulty in which he involved himself by his double-dealing in connection with the recent Corpus Christi procession in Montreal. Faced by resolutions of protest against his action, the Minister has rushed forward an open letter "To the Orangemen of Canada" in which he tries to give the impression that his action in connection with the parade of rifle-bearing militiamen in the procession was not contrary to Orange views. At the same time, he tries to persuade the Roman Catholic electors that he has been careful to consider their wishes. The Minister's latest move is simply another play in the same old "double game." His letter is characteristic of the Minister, too, in that Colonel Hughes brands as "fanatics" all who dare to disagree with him and, by plain implication, refers to those who have protested against his action as "intolerant, fanatical minded people."

"Protestant fanatics who do not understand the fact at all" are the words applied by Hon. Mr. Hughes to some of those whom he seeks to censure in his letter, while in his attempt to ride two horses at once, some Roman Catholics are also condemned as fanatics. And in the same letter in which he speaks of men "who do not understand the facts," Colonel Hughes mis-states the facts himself, or so deals with them as to convey an absolutely false impression as to what concurred in connection with the Montreal procession.

In the month of April last, an order was issued by the Militia Departed to play—the militiamen did not carry their own rifles but they did carry rifles and they did present arms to the Host. And Colonel Hughes cannot deny that the regulation passed last April forbade the carrying of "rifles" and did not mention Government rifles, neither has it yet been denied that as a plain matter of fact the militiamen did carry "Government rifles," though even if Colonel Hughes' excuse that "Government rifles" were not carried were based upon fact, it would still be a lame and weak way of escape.

Colonel Hughes has been trying to fool Roman Catholic electors in Quebec and other parts of Canada by one piece of subterfuge. By another bit of work of the same pattern, he has been trying to fool the Orangemen of Ontario and the other Provinces. It has been a clumsy attempt to play a double-edged game of politics with the whole business. Now that his scheme has been exposed, the Minister tries to cover it up by distorting the facts and by abusing his critics of every faith as "fanatics". This particular kind of bunco work is not likely to deceive either of the two classes Colonel Hughes has been trying to fool.

FRUITS OF BORDEN RULE.

Workmen of Canada Pay Learly For the Triumph of the Conservative-Nationalist Alliance.

The prosperity of country advertised Canada abroad under Laurier rule. The Borden Government is also advertising Canada abroad, but the present advertisement is not the kind that was known in the days of the Liberal Government. To-day the Ottawa Ministry is publishing advertisements abroad warning the people of other lands against emigrating to the Dominion. These warnings are published of necessity because, under Borden rule, industrial conditions in Canada have become so bad that immigration must be checked in order that newcomers may not increase the swollen ranks of the unemployed who walk the streets of Canadian cities and towns in enforced idleness to-day.

What a contrast with the conditions of a few years ago! Then there was work for all who were able and willing to labor. The men in the factories, the foundries and the mills, were working full time and over time, to keep pace with the orders that poured in. Men in the building trades found employment ready at every hand. The unskilled laborer found plenty to do. Wages were good.

To-day factories, foundries and mills are running on part time. In some cases they have been closed. Building has slackened in every part of the Dominion. The men with trades find work scarce. The unskilled laborer

COWED THE CHINESE.

The "Foreign Devil" Used a Collar as a Battle Cry.

On board a launch on which I was sailing up the Yangtze river was about thirty Chinese soldiers of suspicious appearance as to excitement, but fortunately with their rifles. As evening of the first came on they crowded around a small deck house and demanded of native agent to know what the "foreign devil" was doing here. Now had been cleaning and oiling the various parts of my sample machine during the day.

Before nightfall I drew the blinds the deckhouse and, quickly assembled the gun, slipped in a loaded belt. Now told the agent, who was with fear, to tell these fellows that the "foreign devil" "belong crazy" and a "hun lehi" (very fierce) and as a warning to "keep off the grass" I opened the door and let off a string about fifty shots into the air, at the same time giving the Yale college yell which was the handiest warcry I could think of at the moment.

Whether it was the information imparted by the agent, Chen, the shot the Yale cheer I cannot say, but hands crowded to the other end of

And in the same letter in which he speaks of men "who do not understand the facts," Colonel Hughes mis-states the facts himself, or so deals with them as to convey an absolutely false impression as to what concurred in connection with the Montreal procession.

In the month of April last, an order was issued by the Militia Department under Colonel Hughes for bidding militiamen to carry "rifles" in religious processions and to present arms to the Host. There was no proviso that the arms must not be "Government rifles." The order was general "rifles" must not be carried. But when June came round, Montreal militiamen desired to bear rifles in the Corpus Christi procession and to present arms to the Host. Immediately Colonel Hughes began to think of the political effect of his order. Immediately, too, his clumsy trickery began. And this is what happened.

The Montreal militiamen marched in the procession; they carried rifles; they presented arms to the Host. But Colonel Hughes saw to it that they didn't carry their regimental rifles. Instead, they were armed with Lee Enfields which were the property of the Militia Department. The substitution of the Lee Enfields for the regular Ross rifles of the regiment was made through a Montreal hardware merchant of the Conservative faith but it has not been denied that the substituted were the property of the Dominion Government. By allowing the militiamen to march with rifles, though his own order declared that rifles must not be carried, and by allowing the use of arms belonging to his department, though not the use of regimental arms, Colonel Hughes apparently believed that he would satisfy the Roman Catholics of Quebec. A bit of subterfuge was to be enough for them. On the other hand, Colonel Hughes believed that the fact that the militiamen were not allowed to carry their own rifles would "square" him with the Orangemen who are opposed to allowing the militia to bear rifles in such processions and to salute the Host. As soon as protests in regard to the incident were heard from Orangemen, the Minister immediately took refuge behind the alleged fact that the militiamen concerned had not borne "Government rifles." That was the two-faced little game the Colonel was not until the seventeenth century that these sacred sites became known, and there is no historical evidence whatever to prove their identity. Indeed the destruction of Jerusalem under Titus was so complete, that neither streets nor houses could be identified afterwards.

Nevertheless thousands of pilgrims visit the Holy City and follow the road which Christ is said to have followed on the way to Calvary.

The Meaning of "Muff."

The record of the fact that muffs were once worn by more men than women in Paris suggests the old ingenious definition of a muff as "a soft thing that holds a lady's hand without squeezing it." "Muff's" appears to have come to us from Germany, in which language, curiously, "muff" means not only a hand comforter, but also a sulky person or a growling dog. These seem, however, to be two different words. Was our own metaphorical "muff" an allusion to the effeminacy of muff wearers or simply an intimation that the person was distinctly "soft?"—London Chronicle.

Decorating Candles.

Candles can be easily decorated by the following method: The designs can be selected from paper prints tightly wrapped around the candle with the design in contact with the wax. Strike a match and play the flame over the back of the paper. Allow time enough for the melted wax to harden and then remove the paper. The print will be transferred to the wax. Select designs that are not larger than the circumference of the candle. A good impression of ink on thin paper works best.

Looking For Publicity.

"George," she said, "before we go any further I must insist that the word obey be dropped from the marriage service."

"Oh, pshaw!" he replied. "Why bother over that. It's a mere formality. Nobody expects it to be binding any more."

"That's all very well. But if we have it dropped the papers will give us a much more extended notice than they would otherwise."

Advantage of Credit.

"My big sister has a beau."
"So's mine, but I don't like him."
"Know what my sister 'd do if I didn't like her beau?"
"No. What'd she do?"
"She'd send him back and get him changed, 'cause we've got a charge account at the store he comes from."

Nautical Information.

"By the way, captain," said the sweet young thing on the second day out, with a smiling attempt to be chummy, "where does Mother Carey feed her chickens?"

"In the trough of the sea, young woman," replied the captain of the ocean liner, with solemn dignity.

The Supreme Court.

The supreme court of the United States is supposed to be strictly non-political, free from all parties and above all parties. It was designed by the fathers of the constitution to act as the "governor," or "flywheel," of our system of government, maintaining justice and right in the midst of the wrangling factions and clashing interests. According to the theory, the supreme court is to know nothing but the constitution and the laws that are made in pursuance thereof and in every matter that is brought up before it to hold the balance even, regardless of everything else.—New York American.

ORIGIN OF BANK CHECKS

Dense London Fogs, It Is Said, For Their Introduction.

It is claimed that the business owes the idea of the bank check nothing else than London's fogs.

These fogs are sometimes of such density that the pedestrian can see a few feet ahead of him. Sometime over a hundred years ago, it is said, the attacks of thieves and highwaymen in the British capital upon business messengers and tradesmen going through the streets to settle their business became so frequent in times of fog as seriously to interfere with the conduct of London's business.

It was easy for the thief to ambush his victim, club him into insensibility, rob him and then disappear into the murky atmosphere, with little likelihood of apprehension or identification or that passersby would witness commission of the crime or be of assistance in the chase.

In these circumstances bank tradesmen and others set their wits working, with the result that the bank check was devised for the payment of debts. Soon the highwaymen found that a few pieces of paper were all booty they were likely to get for "holdup" of even a wealthy tradesman. Accordingly the activities of daylight robbers soon came to an end, but the convenience of the bank check proved so great that it survived only in London, but was adopted throughout the civilized world.—Washington Star.

It is a spongy, rather slimy, fleshy body, lying in color from light grayish yellow through a range of browns black and in form it is cup shaped, spheroidal or cake shaped, according to the species, its age or the environment in which it grew. In general appearance and consistency and manner in which it cuts with a knife a living sheep's wool sponge is not like a piece of beef liver perforated with holes and canals. HUGO'S WORKSHOP.

His Carpenter's Bench and the Shavings That Fell From It.

A graphic description of a visit to Victor Hugo in Guernsey and of his quaint home there is given by the late Sir William Butler in his autobiography:

"Of the many curious things to be seen in Hauteville House the master's sleeping room was the strangest. He had it built on the roof between two great blocks of chimneys. You ascended to his workshop bedroom by stairs which somewhat resembled a ladder. Quite half of the room was glass, and the view from it was magnificent. The isles of Jethou and Sark were in the middle distance, and beyond lay many a mile of the Norman coast. Alderney lay to the north, and beyond it one saw the glistening windows of the triple lighthouses on the Casquet rocks and still more to the right the high ridges overlooking Cherbourg. The bed was a small camp bedstead, with a table on one side of it and a small desk chest of drawers on the other, with pens, ink and paper always within reach.

"Near the bed stood a small stove, which he lighted himself every morning and on which he prepared his cafe au lait. Then work began at the large table which stood in the glass alcove a few feet from the foot of the bed. This work went on till it was time to dress and descend to dejeuner in the room used for that purpose on the ground floor. As the sheets of writing paper were finished they were numbered and dropped on the floor to be picked up, arranged and put away in the drawer desk at the end of the morning's labor. He called the writing table his 'carpenter's bench' and the leaves which fell from it his 'shavings.'

"It was at this table and in this airy attic that most of the great work of his later life was done. Here were written 'Les Miserables,' 'Les Travailleurs de la Mer' and many volumes of poetry."

WIRELESS LIGHTING.

It Will Be a Scientific Development Said Nikola Tesla.

T is now ten years since that brilliant electric investigator, Nikola Tesla, wrote: "When the great truth accidentally revealed and experimentally confirmed, is fully recognized that this planet, with its appalling immensity, is to electric currents virtually no more than a small metal ball, and that by virtue of this fact many possibilities, each baffling imagination and of incalculable consequence, are rendered absolutely sure of accomplishment; when the first plant is inaugurated and it is shown that a telegraphic message, almost as secret and non-interferable as thought, can be transmitted to any terrestrial distance, the sound of the human voice, with all its intonations and inflections faithfully reproduced at any other point of the globe, the energy of a waterfall made available for supplying light, heat or motive power, anywhere—on sea or land, or high in air—humanity will be like an ant-heap stirred up with a stick. See the excitement coming!"

A few days ago he declared to a correspondent: "We surely are on the eve of the transmission of the voice across the world without wires—not merely signals, but the spoken word. Not only that but the trans-

TRAVEL WITH A ROPE.

Be Sure You Have One Handy if You Take a Trip to Italy.

The following extracts from an article in the Woman's Home Companion explains why no one should travel in Italy without a rope:

"Let me urge the tourist not to fail to provide himself with a stout rope—a piece of clothesline is excellent—with which to tie up the trunk which is to go into the Italian baggage car. If you do not you may miss many train connections. It is a trick of the canny Italian baggage master.

"When you go to check or 'register' your trunk at the railway station this crafty robber will try to stick his fingers under the lock or under the staples at the sides. Then he will shrug his shoulders and tell you blandly that he cannot accept the trunk for registration, as it is not fastened securely enough and if the baggageman stole any of your effects while en route the railroad would be responsible. The trunk must be tied with a rope and sealed, he will tell you.

"You have no time to go rope hunting. You have to buy a rope from him. He charges you what he thinks he can make you pay. The price depends on how many minutes you still have to catch your train. Then he clips on a little leaden tag where the

DUCKING A SCOLD.

Punishment a Long Tongue Used to Win in Old England.

It is interesting in these days of woman's rights and woman's progress to conjure up a picture of a "ducking" as practiced in England at the end of the eighteenth century.

When the "scold" had been properly tried and convicted she was escorted by a crowd of her neighbors—in fact, by the whole village—to the nearest pond, and the greener and slimmer the pond the better. A long plank was produced, at one end of which was the ducking stool, and in this the screaming, struggling victim was securely pinioned.

The chair end of the plank was then pushed far over the edge of the pond, and at a signal it was tilted deep into the green ooze until the scold was completely immersed.

When the dripping, half drowned woman was raised to the surface again to the jeers and laughter of the onlookers it can be imagined that her tongue wagged to some purpose. After a second dose she emerged more subdued, and after a third or fourth she was as penitent a woman as the village contained and was allowed to proceed home, a sadder and wiser woman until the next time.—London Tit-Bits.

from the agent, who was white with fear, to tell these fellows that this reign devil "belong crazy" and also in lehi" (very fierce) and as a sort of rning to "keep off the grass" I opened the door and let off a string of out fifty shots into the air, at the same time giving the Yale college yell, which was the handiest warcry I could think of at the moment.

Whether it was the information imparted by the agent, Chen, the shots or the Yale cheer I cannot say, but all hands crowded to the other end of the bench and remained at a respectful distance until Nanchang was reached, the great amusement of the Chinese captain and engineer, who, however, I deemed it good policy to allow passengers to settle their own disputes without interference. This incident is pleasant to remember, but the time I was badly scared.—From rummaging Revolutionary China," by Hett G. Yung, in World's Work.

ORIGIN OF BANK CHECKS.

London Fogs, It Is Said, Forced Their Introduction.

It is claimed that the business world was the idea of the bank check to bring else than London's fogs.

These fogs are sometimes of such a density that the pedestrian can see but few feet ahead of him. Something over a hundred years ago, it is said, attacks of thieves and highwaymen in the British capital upon bank passengers and tradesmen going through the streets to settle their bills came so frequent in times of heavy fog as seriously to interfere with the duct of London's business.

It was easy for the thief to ambush a victim, club him into insensibility, and then disappear into the thick atmosphere, with little likelihood of apprehension or identification that passersby would witness the commission of the crime or be of any instance in the chase.

In these circumstances bankers, businessmen and others set their wits to working, with the result that the bank check was devised for the payment of debts. Soon the highwaymen found that a few pieces of paper were all the security they were likely to get from a victim of even a wealthy tradesman. Accordingly the activities of the light robbers soon came to an end, the convenience of the bank check proved so great that it survived not only in London, but was adopted throughout the civilized world.—Washington Star.

Raw Sponges.

To persons who know sponges only as they appear ready for sale and use as an animal as it comes from the sea could be unrecognizable. It is a solid, rather slimy, fleshy body, varying in color from light grayish yellow through a range of browns to black and in form it is cup shaped, spherical or cake shaped, according to the species, its age or the environment in which it grew. In general, in appearance and consistency and the manner in which it cuts with a knife, raw sheep's wool sponge is not unlike a piece of beef liver perforated with holes and canals. The sponge of the markets is merely the skeleton, the supporting framework which gives strength and form to the soft, gelatinous tissue of the living animal.

all its intonations and infections faithfully reproduced at any other point of the globe, the energy of a waterfall made available for supplying light, heat or motive power, anywhere—on sea or land, or high in air—humanity will be like an ant-hill stirred up with a stick. See the excitement coming!"

A few days ago he declared to a correspondent: "We surely are on the eve of the transmission of the voice across the world without wires—not merely signals, but the spoken word. Not only that but the transmission of power; and not only the transmission of power—all these things are wrapped up in the wireless transmission of 'energy'—but the wireless transmission of light to isolated places."

That will mean electric light in every house ultimately, in countries like ours where water power for the generating of power is common.

Tesla remarked further: "Once Marconi told the Royal Society we wouldn't have wireless telephony for two hundred years. When a man begins to see possibilities he begins to be helpful. We are about to see tremendous developments. When proper plants are up the voice will fly around the world—and that time is not distant. From my station at Wardenclyffe, Long Island, I'm hoping to announce that I'm the first to send the voice around the world." Those who write under the yoke of telephonic monopoly, will add their prayers for the hastening of the time!

Correcting an Oversight.

There was a terrible noise coming from the direction of the dining room, and the fond mother, alarmed, rushed in. On the floor her son aged 10, was going through all sorts of contortions—somersaults, both backward and forward.

"Willie, Willie!" she cried. "What are you doing? You'll"—

For a moment Willie paused in his gymnastics.

"Oh, it's all right, mother!" he gasped. "You see, I forgot to shake my medicine before taking it—like you always told me to do. So I thought I'd shake myself up as the medicine was inside me!"—London Mail.

The Unchanging Past.

This is the reason why the past has such magical power. The beauty of its motionless and silent pictures is like the enchanted purity of late autumn, when the leaves, though one breath would make them fall, still glow against the sky in golden glory. The past does not change nor strive. Like Duncan, after life's fitful fever, it sleeps well. What was eager and grasping, what was petty and transitory has faded away. The things that were beautiful and eternal shine out of it like stars in the night. Its beauty to a soul not worthy of it is unendurable, but to a soul which has conquered fate the past is the key of religion.—Bertrand Russell.

Slow Death.

ly that you cannot accept the trunk for registration, as it is not fastened securely enough and if the baggage man stole any of your effects while en route the railroad would be responsible. The trunk must be tied with a rope and sealed, he will tell you.

"You have no time to go rope hunting. You have to buy a rope from him. He charges you what he thinks he can make you pay. The price depends on how many minutes you still have to catch your train. Then he clips on a little leaden tag where the rope is knotted, and your trunk is officially sealed. It is a very serious offense to break this seal.

"Now, then, if your trunk is roped when it reaches the hands of the boss baggage man he is required at your request and upon payment of 2 cents to affix the official seal. So, as a last word, don't forget the rope!"

Golfer's Great Catch.

A good story is told of the late William Mollison, the actor. Playing on a Tayside links, he was driving off at the seventh hole (which stands on a high embankment with a burn in front), and after the usual waggle, he let go. But the head of his driver was loose. It came off and went into the burn and left him with nothing but the shaft, with the whipping straightened out—one end attached to the shaft and the other to the head of the club. There he stood a la angler, then he was heard to shout to his caddie: "Get the landing net ready, you fool! I've got a ten pounder here!"—World of Golf.

Clear Coffee.

It is rather expensive to use an egg every morning to settle your coffee, as a great many do, and it is not clear and free from grounds if you boil it. Put your coffee in the coffee pot, pour boiling water in and set where it will be hot, but not boil. If you have your coffee ground fine you will get better flavor and it will be ready in about ten minutes. If ground coarse allow about twenty minutes.

RENTED SCENERY.

It Was a Parisian's Idea, and It Suited the Thrifty Peasants.

M. Georges Moreau one beautiful day, in the course of a walk at Villiers-Saint Benoist, greatly admired three magnificent oaks which towered from the edge of a field.

"You'll not see 'em much more, citizen," growled the owner of the land. "They make too much shade. I'm going to cut them down."

"What a sacrilege! Cut down those magnificent trees! Better rent them to me."

"What'll you do with them?"

"I shall look at them as I pass by. Will you give to me for 15 francs a year the right to admire them?"

"Agreed! It's only a Parisian who could have such a funny idea!"

The story spread abroad, and now whenever M. Moreau takes a walk in that district the peasants hail him with: "Hey, citizen, will you rent those trees there of me? If not I'll cut 'em down. Yes or no? One, two, three!"

M. Moreau yields and pays to save the lives of the trees that delight his view. The little birds would be ungrateful did they not salute with their most harmonious roulades the preserver of their nests.—Cri de Paris.

DEVICES FOR SAFETY AT SEA.

Interest keen r than usual attended the recent arrival at St. Lawrence ports of the Canadian Northern liner "Royal George" because during her passage across the Atlantic a series of demonstrations had been given of the possibilities of a new wireless aid to navigation.

Through the genius of Marconi, during the last few years the narrative of a workaday world has been given daily to the passengers on most of the steamships ploughing the seven seas. The Italian inventor gave the air a tongue. Now, in the new wonder, the Marconi-Bellini-Tosi System has been added, literally, a wireless eye. The new device is classified as a "direction finder." Its duty is to seek out all wireless stations, whether stationary or in motion—or in other words on coast line or high seas, within a radius of fifty miles and to indicate for the guidance of the navigating officers the exact relation of the ship to these in terms of latitude and longitude. Its sphere of usefulness, even in the present experimental stage, is to assist the captain during "thick" weather, in maintaining a clear course in the travelled ocean "lanes" in passing points, and in making port.

Like many inventions useful to mankind this wireless finder is remarkable for its simplicity. Although one of Marconi's engineers, Signor Emilio Ichino, came out on the "Royal George" to make the tests, its operations does not require an expert and any of the bridge officers can obtain a bearing as easily as with a compass and just as conveniently, the instruments being set up in the chart room.

The device is not bulky. The "detector" box, which is the medium for locating wireless stations, is but large enough to hold two small switches and a graduated dial fitted with a movable indicator. Connected with this cabinet is the telephone box, differing from others in that it is equipped with a crystal of carborundum which translates the wireless into a signal intelligible to the ear of the operator. There are two receivers fastened to the ears of the operator by metal straps going over the head. Then, too, the device differs from the ordinary wireless apparatus in the aerials, according to Mr. David Sarnoff contract manager of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of America, who in addition gives the following description: "Instead of being composed of several straight parallel wires, the aerial of this new system consists of two large wire triangles, which are so arranged that they cannot receive a message at the same time with the same strength. If one of them receives a message full strength the other does not receive it at all; and if both receive it the message is always stronger over one than over the other. The position of the sending station is determined by the strength of the message as it is received over each triangle. These two wires are connected to the finder box by two switches. On this box is a dial marked in the degrees of a compass with a movable indicator. Half of this dial is affected by a message coming over one of the triangles and the other half by the other triangle, so that the indicator is moved accordingly. When the current is at its strongest the indicator points to the direction of the sending station. To determine the point on the dial at which the message is strongest the operator moves the indicator first one way and then the other, noting the points at which the current disappears. The mark midway between these two vanishing points gives the direction of the message."

Both the Marconi engineers, Signor

Both the Marconi engineer, Signor Emilie Ichino, and the Captain of the "Royal George" expressed themselves on arrival at Quebec as highly pleased with the experiments which had been made on the voyage. The instrument had been accurate to a degree in detecting the compass direction of other stations whether on shore or on other vessels. They had been able to ascertain the compass position of Cape Race, Cape Ray, Father Point and the ships, Columbia, Calgarian and Sicilian. The Columbia had been 68 miles away, the Calgarian 53 and the Sicilian 18. Both men were confident that neither wind, wave or fog would effect the accuracy of the new wireless device.

The Canadian Northern, since the inauguration of its Atlantic steamship service, has established a reputation for experimentation with new ideas calculated to improve ocean navigation. It was first to employ a "relay" of operators to secure continuous wireless service. Later it enabled Professor Barnes, of McGill, Montreal, to test his device for the detection of ice at sea. Since that time one of its captains has conceived and developed a highly efficient device for the launching of small boats at sea. Now it is the Marconi-Bellini-Tosi System,

Testament
descriptions of Church. The Temple, both type antitype, was Pastor Russell's theme to-day. His text was, "The Temple of God is holy, which Temple are."—1 Corinthians 3:17.

The Pastor began with the declaration that both St. Peter and Paul teach that the Church of Christ is God's Temple. He gave Scriptural proofs that only through great Temple can mankind get to harmony with God; for the mighty has declared that He have no fellowship with sinners. St. Paul was quoted as saying this antitypical Temple, "Our foundation can no man lay that laid, which is Jesus Christ." Peter also was quoted as declaring to the Church, "Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house a holy Priesthood."

Solomon's Temple, the specimen maintained, was a type of this Temple of God. He then briefly sketched that Temple, and called attention to two striking peculiarities connected with its construction: first, that the stones were taken from underneath its site; and second, that neither hammer nor tool of iron was heard in the building during its erection. These two features he holds are typical.

The Living Stones of the Great Temple.

Next the antitype of Solomon's Temple was discussed—the Church of Christ. The living stones of antitypical structure are taken from the world, but are chiseled and polished in that antitypical quarry. After they have been prepared, they are removed from the quarry. More than eighteen hundred years this work has been in progress.

The process of cutting, chiseling and polishing these living stones was explained. Each has been separated in spirit from the world. It was difficult to block out character and to become separated from surroundings, it was still more difficult to endure the necessary chiseling—experience after experience trial after trial—to prepare a stone for a place in the glorious Temple yet to be constructed. Much time the polishing process continues. Each living stone polishes others.

Here the Pastor showed that through severe trials and tests may come from the world, yet the finest products from contact with the brethren. Whoever learns to love brethren, and to endure all trials

Quality Counts.

The Proper Place.

A Chinese witness was on the stand.

An interpreter was employed, but his understanding of English was not always clear.

"Now, you may tell the jury what change, if any, there has been in the room since the shooting of Jones," said the prosecutor to the witness.

The interpreter, after conversing with the witness in Chinese, replied, "He says there never was any change any place except in the cash drawer."

Costly Eyeteeth.

"I guess paw must have passed a lot of time at the dentist's when he was in New York," said Johnny Green.

"Why do you think so," queried his ma.

"Cause I heard him tell a man to-day that it cost him nearly $300 to get his eyeteeth cut," replied Johnny.

THE FOURTH DIMENSION.

It is an Unprovable Theory, as It is Based Upon the Unknown.

In answer to the following interesting question, "I understand that a crawling insect knows only two dimensions, length and breadth, all lines being horizontal to it and that it cannot conceive of a perpendicular; do I understand correctly that the fourth dimension is to us as the third is to the insect?" Edgar Lucien Larkin in the New York American says:

"We do not know the mind of the insect and cannot decide whether the third dimension is known to it. And the fourth dimension is not surely known to man.

"To be known geometrically a straight line must be drawn perpendicularly to three others mutually perpendicular—that is, a perpendicular must be constructed to all three sides of a cube. But this is impossible to the geometer.

"Mind as now phasing in man does not know what anything is. Then it does not know what space is, although space is supposed not to be a thing. Yet we say space includes all things. If we know nothing about space we do not know, therefore, whether it is curved or not. But the fourth dimension is a transcendental concept based on the curious theory that space has curvature, all of which is unknown and not proved."

Smells Like Half the World.

It is said that one-half of the world does not know how the other half lives, but we always know when the people next door are going to have boiled cabbage for dinner.

They Were Converted.

The Board of Health of a Canadian town visited the slaughterhouses the other day and straightway announced that they would become vegetarians.

LONDON'S "QUARTERS."

Each Trade or Profession, as a Rule, Flocks All by Itself.

Undoubtedly one of the most curious features of London is the manner in which men engaged in particular businesses and professions have congregated, for some mysterious reason, in certain streets or areas. This peculiarity is recalled by the suggestion that Harley street will before long cease to be the abode of doctors, on account of the fact that it is becoming in these days of motors too noisy.

Where, should the doctors decide to desert Harley street, they will move to is, of course, difficult to say, but it is almost safe to affirm that when they do migrate they will finally settle down again all together in some quiet corner of the metropolis.

There are many Londoners who still remember the time when London's chief doctors congregated in the neighborhood of Finsbury square, which was deserted for Harley street on account of the many businesses which set up in the former neighborhood.

There are many other curious instances, however, of the manner in which professional and business men flock together. Tottenham Court road, for instance, is the great furniture thoroughfare of the metropolis, while Long Acre is monopolized by motor car firms and carriage builders. Aviation have made Piccadilly the headquarters of the aeroplane industry, in which street the Aero club and the offices of the Aeroplane are situated, while film manufacturers have congregated in the immediate neighborhood of Charing Cross.

Why is Hatton Garden the home of diamond merchants and why do so many music hall artists insist on living at Brixton? A stroll down Holborn reveals the fact that it is a favorite street for the show rooms of bicycle manufacturers, while there are probably more typewriting firms in Queen Victoria street than any other part of the metropolis. Gerard street, Rupert street and some of the other streets in Soho appear attractive to the cinema trade, and many private theaters are found in that classic neighborhood.

Hat manufacturers seem to have a great liking for Blackfriars road, while Willesden can probably boast of more laundry firms than any other district in London. Most of the builders are in Wandsworth, the bootmakers and cabinetmakers in Bethnal Green, tanners in Bermondsey, potters in Lambeth, brewers and printers in Southwark.

Hoxton seems to be the home of jam manufacturers and Houndsditch that of toy dealers, while Clerkenwell road is the greater center of ice cream merchants, makers of street organs and mosaic floor makers. Charing Cross road is a street of bookshops and Fleet street the hub of the newspaper world.—London Tit-Bits.

Supply and Demand.

Mr. Francis was about to start away to attend the funeral of his rich old uncle.

"Put a couple of large handkerchiefs into my grip, dear," he said to his wife. "The old gentleman promised to leave me $20,000 and I want to shed some appropriate tears."

"But suppose when the will is read," said the wife, "you find he hasn't left you anything."

"In that case," replied he, "you had better put in three."

VERY ANCIENT ART.

Rude Paintings That Date Back to Prehistoric Times.

Remains of prehistoric man which are occasionally discovered seem to prove that there was a knowledge of art even in the earliest times. A Spanish nobleman, Marcellino de Sautola, was industrially digging in a cave on his estate in search of prehistoric stone implements and bones, while his little daughter, who accompanied him, occupied herself in play.

She happened to look up at the vaulted ceiling overhead, and began to shout, "Toros! Toros!" in such excitement that her father paused to investigate. Immediately he forgot his search for stone implements. The little girl had discovered some very remarkable prehistoric paintings.

The paintings were of the bison, which the little girl mistook for bulls, or toros. The colors were red, black and gray. The technique of the drawings and the proportions of the figures were really good and the positions were very lifelike.

In the cavern of Font de Gaume, France, paintings of mammoths, bison and other animals have been found, and most of them show a considerable degree of skill. In the great caverns of Niaux, near Tarascon, France, half a mile from the entrance, the smooth polished walls are covered with outline drawings of animals, drawn in oxide manganese mingled with grease, which gives permanent lithographic effect on the smooth limestone.

"Rats" and Royalty.

In "Random Recollections," by R. Caton Woodville, is a story in which King George (when Duke of York) figures. The duke was examining a new Mauser rifle of the latest pattern—the type then purchased by Kruger—which had been presented to Mr. Woodville:

"I showed him the rifle and its mechanism and expressed an opinion that it was superior to the Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield rifles. I had a very talkative parrot which did not always use polite language. The duke examined the two rifles carefully and at last expressed an opinion that he thought our rifle better, or, at any rate, as good, when a voice came from behind his back with the rude remark, 'Rats!' It was my parrot. The duke wheeled round. 'Who said that?' he asked, and the bird again repeated, 'Rats, rats!'"

A Frontier of Peace.

With its row of crumbling forts and rusty guns the frontier between Canada and the United States stands as an object lesson to all nations. While it is the longest, it is the safest and surest frontier in the world. Three thousand miles and more of it lie between Passamaquoddy bay and Puget sound, and in all that distance not a shot of a gun points menacingly from either country toward the other. A few small and comparatively ineffective fishery cruisers guard the water front, none of which would be of much use in time of war.—St. John's Telegraph.

Not Even Common Sense.

Mrs. Newrich—My husband has a bad cold. Mrs. Kowler—I understand that colds are quite common. Mrs. Newrich—Oh, then please don't mention my husband's cold to any one. I shouldn't want it known around that we have anything that's common.—Boston Transcript.

SERVANTS OF OTHER DAYS.

A Uniform Scheme That Failed and Ugliness as an Asset.

In 1808 the formation was attempted in London of a league of housewives pledged to engage only servants who would undertake to wear a uniform. In the preliminary manifesto it was also proposed to prohibit servants from wearing "superfluities, such as flowers, feathers, brooches, buckles or clasps, earrings, lockets, neck ribbons and velvets, kid gloves, sashes, jackets, Garibaldi's, trimmings on dresses, crinolines or steel of any kind." On her Sunday, out a servant was to assume "a neat alpaca dress, linen collars and cuffs, black apron, black shawl, straw bonnet bound round with ribbons, thread or cotton gloves, small cotton umbrella to keep off the sun and rain." The costume was to be diversified in cold weather by a linsey dress and a shepherd's plaid shawl. This extraordinary scheme found very few supporters and had to be abandoned.

Some bygone housewives appear to have regarded ugliness as a quality to be desired in their servants. When Eliza Coke, daughter of Coke of Norfolk, was about to marry she wrote to her prospective mother-in-law: "Pray have the goodness to decide as you think best about the pretty housemaid. I wish she were less pretty and less fond of dress, but if her conduct and principles are good neither are really objectionable faults. I think our establishment will be a pattern of morality, particularly if Mr. Stanhope engages the squinting butler and the terrible housemaid he mentioned to me."—Chicago News.

It is true that Mr. Edison finds it impossible to enjoy his holidays he is not half as clever a man as we had supposed.

ring, brotherly-kindness, love."

Construction of the Antitypical Temple.

The construction of the antitypical temple was then shown. Eighteen hundred years ago the Foundation stone was laid—in Heaven—the Op Stone, into whom all other ones must be fitted, as St. Paul desires. Throughout this Gospel Age a great Master Workman has been pervising the preparation of the living stones under strict rules as to size, shape, etc. Not until the full number is ready will the construction of that glorious Temple begin. The Pastor holds that we are living in the end of this Age, and that therefore the work of construction is probably begun. This does not imply, he declared, that the final polish has been given to all stones. Those long since prepared could be placed while the last are being finished. The Scriptures so intimate which say that "the dead in Christ all rise first"—beforehand—and at "we who are alive and remain all be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord."

After every living stone has been placed, the glorification of the Temple will follow. In the type, after Solomon, type of our Lord, had offered the sacrifice, God accepted it. Then glory filled the Temple. In the antitype, when our Lord has constructed the Temple, He will await the Father's acceptance, after which the glory of God will fill this living temple.

God will be in that glorious Temple of the future—the glorified Christ. Divine Power will operate through it, and all nations will draw near to God. But they must approach Him through The Christ. God's House will thus be a House of prayer for all nations, as foretold the Prophet Isaiah.

The Priests of this Temple will be Jesus, the great High Priest, and the Church, the under priests. As yet there is no Royal Priesthood; for only those found worthy to share our Redeemer's Throne will constitute it Priesthood.

Sweeping—dust contains many
microbes.

SWEEPING is actually dangerous, as well as uncomfortable and almost useless, if it merely stirs up the floor's dust and dirt. Sweeping-dust contains millions of flaky atoms of dried vegetable and animal matter which carry disease-breeding germs and microbes.

DUSTBANE

"Catches Sweeping Dust"

Dustbane contains an antiseptic which kills germs, and its evaporation purifies the air, protecting women and children from dust-microbes. The bright green powder is swept ahead of the broom, falling upon and absorbing the dust, leaving floor or carpet bright and clean.

Dustbane saves labor in sweeping, saves nearly all your dusting, prevents damage by moths, keeps carpets bright, and protects the family's health. It can be used over and over again, and its cost is trifling.

Try it free—at our risk.

We know that when you've once used Dustbane, you will never again be satisfied to sweep without it. In order that you may try it without risk, we make the following.

Trial Offer

ORDER a regular 35-cent tin of Dustbane from your grocer. Use it for all your sweeping for a week. If you are not absolutely satisfied, send the partly used tin, back to the grocer within ten days and he will refund the full purchase price.

Full directions for use on every tin.

A Tangled Web

BY MRS. ALEXANDER

Author of "Beaton's Bargain," "His Perfect Trust,"
"By Another Name," "Her Heart's Idol," "Half a Truth," "H's Rival."

In the drawing-room Bea was dressing her doll, while her mother read aloud some of Grimm's fairy tales.

"How late you are, Nora; did you get wet?"

"No, at least very little."

"Had George Damen come back? How did the hunt go off? I should be glad to know if Mark Winton is safe."

"I did not wait. I think the fox must have headed for Anchester downs. Do let me have a cup of tea! I feel so tired."

No more was said; but when the time came for shutting up the house, Mrs. L'Estrange sent to ask if Roberts had heard of any accident at the hunt. Roberts reported that young Mr. Gardner had been thrown, and had broken his collar-bone, and that as he (Roberts) had been leaving Oldbridge that evening, where he had gone to fetch oats, he had met Mr. Winton and the rector's son, riding back, all covered with mud and "tired like."

"I am really quite relieved," said Mrs. L'Estrange. "I was rather uneasy."

Nora did not reply and the rest of the evening was spent in making their plans for a visit to London, and writing to an ex-cook and house-keeper, who had taken a lodging-house in one of the streets on the Tyburnian side of Hyde Park, and to whom all Evesleigh folk applied when they needed temporary quarters in the great city.

The next morning broke bright and crisp after a night of rain, and after their midday meal, Mrs. L'Estrange drove away in the pony-carriage, with her little girl, to do various errands in the town. Nora, relieved by the absence of Winton, whose presence was of late always a restraint, put on thick boots, and set forth to visit the blind woman whom she had rather neglected of late. She accused herself of selfishness, and many minor crimes and misdemeanors, as she donned her walking attire, and bullied herself considerably on the score of being better off than she deserved, and leading a self-indulgent life. Still, she did not see how she could do otherwise. At any rate, she would never sink into a weak sentimentalism, a faded flower, pining under the weight of an unrequited attachment. No, in a month or two she would have thrown off this dead, aching, steady pain in her heart, and be able to smile at it.

With this brave determination she started on her walk to the blind woman's cottage, seeing as she went, in spite of all her resolutions, the picture of Winton contending with his horse, as it was stamped on her mental retina the day before.

Walking across the bridge which connected her own little domain with Evesleigh, she turned sharply into the path leading to the moorland higher up, and nearly ran against the lord of the manor coming in an opposite direction.

"This is luck!" cried Marsden. "In another moment you would have

"I fear not. I thought I might have tracked them to the den of an old Dutch receiver of stolen goods, and went myself to Amsterdam, to see what I could do—all in vain. Don't talk of them; you don't know what an infernal blow that unfortunate business has been to me. That my guest should have been robbed almost under my eyes! It's a sort of blot on me and my house."

"That is quite a morbid idea. How could any reasonable being blame you? I am sure Mrs. Ruthven—"

"Mrs. Ruthven has behaved very well, but she is desperately cut up, and I do not wonder at it," interrupted Marsden.

"She is very nice, and so pretty— attractive-looking, rather."

Marsden glanced sharply at her before he answered.

"Yes, she is a piquant little devil, but she ought not to be so heavy with her paint-brush about the lips; that sort of art may be overdone."

"Squire!" in a shocked tone, "how can you be such a traitor? I thought you were fond of Mrs. Ruthven—that you were her best friend."

"So I am, but I am not, therefore, blind. All the world (except you) can see she paints her lips."

"I did not, and it is not nice or loyal of you to tell me."

"I am rebuked. You are an awful piece of perfection, Nora."

"Do not be sarcastic. I know my own shortcomings well enough; but I am not false to my friends. I shall not confine my weakness to you."

"Do you fancy I would betray you? You little understand me. Why, you are my own—" he hesitated—"my own kinswoman."

Nora shook her head, and they walked on silently for a few moments. Then she said:

"Helen and I are thinking of going up to town for a couple of months. It is rather melancholy and uncomfortable to be so far from every one in the winter. Helen has been so nervous ever since that robbery."

"You are quite right—it is an excellent idea," cried Marsden, with hearty approbation. "Where do you think of staying—at the Langham?"

"The Langham!" laughing. "Why, the Langham would swallow up all our money in ten days. No, no, we think of going to Mrs. May, if she can take us in. Do you remember Mrs. May?"

"Well, yes, I seem to have heard the name."

"She was cook at Evesleigh when you were a boy, I believe. Oh! years ago."

"Exactly, before I grew old and decrepit."

"She has a house near Hyde Park, and we shall take rooms there."

"You'll be awfully uncomfortable, you'll get nothing to eat but scorched mutton and watery rice-pudding, and you'll never move without carrying off a knitted chair-cover on your back, or hung to a button."

"You are quite wrong! We stayed a week there on our way back from

"What has become of Winton? Is he here still?"

"No; he is gone to Devonshire, I think."

"Ha! and how has he been prospering?"

"Prospering? How? In what way?"

"With your step-mother. I expected to hear that their engagement had been announced when I came back. Why has he let the grass grow under his feet?"

Nora was too amazed to reply at once; but memory swiftly unrolled her picture of the past few months, and showed a hundred important nothings which corroborated Marsden's startling assertion.

"I suppose I am very stupid," she exclaimed, as soon as she could speak, "but I never suspected this. Helen, too, is so frank, she would surely have told me."

"I am not so sure of that! Pray, what do you think kept a man like Winton in such a dull hole as Oldbridge, and brought him day after day to Brookdale? Yourself, eh? A very natural supposition! You are sufficiently magnetic, sweet cousin."

"Indeed—indeed," began Nora eagerly, but Marsden went on smiling, and shaking his finger at her:

"It is soothing to so imperfect a fellow as myself to find out a little weakness—a tinge of vanity in such an admirable 'human' as you are! I don't doubt that Winton, like many another, would have fallen to your spear; but, you see, he was Mrs. L'Estrange's lover in by-gone ages—when they were boy and girl, and after—I know all about it. I fancy Winton when he first came home from India, was not too anxious to take Helen Landell back with him. I remember her, a sad-eyed, timid creature, under the thumb—I should say thumb-screw—of old Miss Webster. She was a soft, taking little thing then, she is a very charming woman now, and Winton is well off. It would be a comfortable settlement for her and her little girl, for they are, I think, quite dependent on you."

At the end of this long speech, during which Marsden watched his companion's face, Nora was quite prepared to reply.

"If they are fond of each other, I shall be very pleased. Helen has been a real mother to me, and I like Mr. Winton immensely. You don't know what a hard life Helen has had. If Mr. Winton will be kind and make her happy—and now you have opened my eyes, I think he is fond of her—I shall be glad. But as to her dependence on me, if I die before I am twenty-one, of course all I possess will go to Beatrice, and as soon as ever I am of age I will settle half my fortune on Helen, to go to Bea after her."

"But, Nora! you must not be quixotic; make some provision for your father's widow, but not the half of your fortune," cried Marsden, looking at her with surprise.

"Oh! if Helen is married, well, I shall make the settlement on Bea only. I have always considered it an oversight on my father's part not providing for her, an oversight I am bound to make good."

Her tone was perfectly easy and natural; nor did it express the slightest consciousness of doing more than a simple act of justice.

Marsden walked on in silence for a few paces.

"You are right, I think," said he. "It is a horrid nuisance to know that people belonging to you want for anything; but, at the same time, you are acting with unusual liberality. When shall you be of age? if I dare ask such a question!"

"The fifteenth of February next, I shall be twenty-one."

traction that drew Winton so constantly to Brookdale, to be so bill to the gentle charm of her step-mother's looks and voice and manner. She saw it all now. How quiet, tender Winton always was in speaking to Helen, and how much more notice he took of her than of his step-daughter. Yet across this conviction would shoot puzzling gleams of memory, recalling significant looks and words which might have been interpreted as indicative of strong liking for herself, this she doubted was but the exaggeration of her own vain unhealthy imagination. How she thanked Heaven that she could read her thoughts. She was tolerably safe, no one save Mr. Ruthven had ever hinted at any possible tendresse between herself and Winton, and that suspicion would soon be dispelled by the announcement of his engagement to Mrs. L'Estrange.

At any rate, for the moment, Nora thought herself quite cured. She made some changes in her dress, rearranged her hair so as to be ready for the evening. Then she descended to the drawing-room, and set herself diligently to answer some long-neglected letters.

Before she had finished Mrs. L'Estrange returned, and there were packages to be opened, purchases to be looked at and put away, and Bea's report of all she had seen and heard to be listened to.

Mrs. L'Estrange was surprised at pleased to hear that Marsden was to be their guest. He was a great favorite with her, and showed her much kindly consideration.

On this evening he conversed chiefly with her, but she was too observant too warmly interested in her step-daughter, not to perceive that he was aware of Nora's every movement, even her slightest gesture. She had already suspected that the lord of Evesleigh had lost his heart to his young kinswoman, and she was not a little puzzled by Nora's evident unconcern. She had very little idea, however, of the overpowering intensity of the passion Nora had inspired.

From motives, which need now be revealed, Marsden masked his batteries cleverly; until the right moment came to open fire, he was merely a pleasant, playful, admiring relative. To-night, however, she was struck by some slight though distinct indications, which escaped his resolute self-control.

Marsden had never denied himself anything, nor thought any price too high for the pleasure of the moment. He had had endless love affairs, but none of any depth, and when he met his young cousin, he was unaccountably fascinated by her. Her delicate freshness, her simplicity and shrewdness, her quick spirit and keen self-respect, her moments of softness suggestive of delicious possibilities of responsive tenderness, which was not to be lightly won, made to him an irresistible combination.

Clifford Marsden was a man of fine taste; taste so true, that it made him enamored of goodness, if only for its harmony. Alas! what a chasm that "but" covered! He could be generous too, though I was quite capable of sacrificing and everything to the gratification of self, yet, at times, the self too was amiable. At present he was determined Nora L'Estrange should be his wife. She was the first woman he had ever wished to marry, and nothing should stand between him and the accomplishment of his wishes.

In such a passion there is a tinge of cruelty. Marsden would rather kill her with his own hand, than give her up to another.

With this brave determination she started on her walk to the blind woman's cottage, seeing as she went, in spite of all her resolutions, the picture of Winton contending with his horse, as it was stamped on her mental retina the day before.

Walking across the bridge which connected her own little domain with Evesleigh, she turned sharply into the path leading to the moorland higher up, and nearly ran against the lord of the manor coming in an opposite direction.

"This is luck!" cried Marsden. "In another moment you would have passed, and I should have only found Mrs. L'Estrange."

"Not Mrs. L'Estrange either," said Nora, returning his cordial greeting. "She has gone into Oldbridge for the afternoon."

"Then, if you will allow me, I'll be your escort."

"Oh! yes, do come," returned Nora, heartily glad of his company. "When did you arrive, and where did you come from?"

"I came last night, that is to say, last afternoon, and I came from Paris."

"Mrs. Ruthven, when she wrote, did not seem to know what had become of you."

Marsden turned, and walked beside her.

"Oh! yes, to be sure. I went away to a place near Fontainebleau, to see an old chum of mine, De Meudon, who has been very ill, and so a letter or two of hers miscarried; but I saw her the day before yesterday in town. She is in a fidget to complete the purchase of a damp villa at Twickenham, which she could not do without me, but I have settled everything to her satisfaction."

"And are you going to stay here?"

"No—yes," replied Marsden, with a quick sigh, and he looked earnestly into her eyes, a curious, wistful, strained expression in his own. "I am a rolling stone, you see, Nora—I presume your high mightiness will permit me to use your baptismal appellation—and I am rather at a loss what to do with myself. I shall be hard up for another year or two, but then the property will be pretty clear—then I will settle in the halls of my fathers, and live cleanly and like a gentleman."

"I hope you will, squire," said Nora, kindly and seriously.

"What! Do you think I have been such a scamp?" asked Marsden, laughing.

"You know I did not mean that," she returned, the color rising in her cheek. "I hope you will live at Evesleigh."

"And be your neighbor? Thank you, sweet cousin."

"Yes, it would be very nice to have you at the manor house. It looks ghostly when shut up."

"Your kindness is killing. Do you understand why?"

"No; there is something not quite like yourself about you to-day. You are looking white and thin. Have you been ill, Clifford?"

"You darling. How graciously you have granted my prayer, and brought out the name I want you to call me, with just the sweetest little hesitation in the world."

He laughed as he spoke, carrying off the ardor of his words with a mocking air.

"Nonsense!" returned Nora, a little piqued. "I did not hesitate at all. You seem to forget I am not a child."

"I am deeply conscious you are a woman; a—"

He pulled himself up short, and added: "A most serious young woman."

"And I suppose there is no chance of finding the lost jewels?" said Nora, to change the subject, for there was an indefinable something in Marsden's tone which she neither liked nor understood.

"Well, yes, I seem to have heard the name."

"She was cook at Evesleigh when you were a boy, I believe. Oh! years ago."

"Exactly; before I grew old and decrepit."

"She has a house near Hyde Park, and we shall take rooms there."

"You'll be awfully uncomfortable, you'll get nothing to eat but scorched mutton and watery rice-pudding, and you'll never move without carrying off a knitted chair-cover on your back, or hung to a button."

"You are quite wrong! We stayed a week there, on our way back from Germany, and it was very comfortable. I do not think there is a knitted antimacassar, if that is what you mean, in the house."

"Telling lightly, with occasional silence on Marsden's part, they reached the blind woman's cottage. "How long shall you stay here?"

"I do not know, but you need not trouble about me."

"If I choose to trouble, you can not prevent me. I am going to look for one of the gamekeepers about a mile further on, and I shall wait for you outside, when I return."

"Oh, no! pray do not mind, I—"

"Do I bore you?" very gravely.

"How can you say so, Clifford?"

"Would you rather not walk with me?"

"Nonsense!"

"Very well, I will wait for you, and if you give me the slip, deep will be my wrath."

"I have no such intention," and she vanished into the cottage.

Marsden walked on in deep thought, his brows knit, his handsome face firmly set, all the smiling softness of his ordinary aspect gone and replaced by a stern haggard look, that made him seem years older.

When Nora had read the better part of a newspaper to her old protégée, and discussed some of its contents, she perceived the odor of tobacco wafted through the open window, and guessing that the squire was waiting, she bade the blind woman good-bye and went to join him.

"Will you tell me," he said, throwing away his cigar, when they had gone a few paces, "what is the pleasure of going into a stuffy cottage, to read to a stupid old woman, who would probably prefer being left to sleep?"

"It is not a very great pleasure certainly, but I assure you I like reading to old Betsy, she is very shrewd, and though I don't profess to be an angel, we ought to help each other sometimes. It is not much to do for a poor soul, think how lonely she must be. We should be rather worthless, if we did only what we like."

"Hum! That has been the only rule I have ever followed."

"I do not believe you. People would not like you so well, if you cared for nothing but self; you must have some heart."

"I begin to fear I have," said Marsden, as if to himself. "I assure you," he went on, "it is impossible to me to do what I do not like, and equally impossible to resist snatching at what I desire, ay! and getting it, too, by some means or other."

"What a bad character!" cried Nora. "If any one else spoke of you in that way, I should have been quite angry."

"And would you have defended me?"

"Yes, of course! you are my kinsman and good friend."

"And you are a very pearl of a cousin."

They were silent till they reached a turn in the path, from which the dull red towers of Oldbridge were visible; the sight of them perhaps promoted the abrupt question:

providing for her, an oversight I am bound to make good."

Her tone was perfectly easy and natural; nor did it express the slightest consciousness of doing more than a simple act of justice.

Marsden walked on in silence for a few paces.

"You are right, I think," said he. "It is a horrid nuisance to know that people belonging to you want for anything; but, at the same time, you are acting with unusual liberality. When shall you be of age? If I dare ask such a question!"

"The fifteenth of February next, I shall be twenty-one."

"And suppose you marry some stinky fellow before that date?"

Nora laughed merrily.

"I do not fancy I shall run away with any one between this and February, and if I marry soberly, conventionally, the lawyers can devise the means of carrying out my wishes, or, if the suitor likes my poor little money better than myself, why, he may go," she waved her hand with an expressive gesture.

"I wonder what sort of a woman you will develop into, Nora?" said Marsden, his eyes fixed upon her as if brooding over some somber thought.

"Am I not developed already, squire?"

"You have heaps to learn! for one thing, your own power! but why do you go back to that patriarchal appellation? Promise to call me Clifford, always Clifford."

"I will try," returned Nora smiling. "Now Clifford, here we are at the bridge, and before we part, promise me first to consider all I have said a profound secret between us two; next not to tease Helen about Mr. Winton; she is a shy creature, and I do think he has absolutely proposed for her yet, so it would annoy her dreadfully if you said anything on the subject."

"Trust me, I shall be most discreet! But, Nora, suppose this marriage takes place and they will go to India. What shall you do?"

"Sty behind and educate Pea, or marry that stinky man you seem to have found for me."

"Will you promise to marry the man I shall find for you?" cried Marsden eagerly.

"Yes! If he is pleasant and handsome, and rich, and accomplished, and ready to love, honor, and obey me," returned Nora with mock solemnity. "It will take you a long time to find such a rara avis; undertake nothing rashly, so good-bye!"

"Are you going to dismiss me? What have I done?"

"Helen is out and I—I am going to be busy; but if you will dine with us at seven, we will not oblige you to eat scorched mutton."

"Thanks, many thanks. It is," looking at his watch, "three-twenty. May I present myself at half past six?"

"Yes, certainly. Helen will be delighted to see you." She bent her head with an arch smile and, turning away, walked quickly toward the cottage.

Marsden leaned his arms on the parapet of the bridge and looked after her so long as she was in sight, then he pursued his way home in profound thought.

Nora went quietly to her own room, to cogitate the wonderful information imparted by Marsden.

She was glad, very glad, not only for Helen, but for herself. This knowledge would fortify her to resist her own folly, to uproot the ridiculous fancy which had mastered her. The man who was to be Helen's husband ought to be, could be, nothing to her. Her cure was certain. But oh! what a weak conceived fool she had been, to take for granted that she herself and she only was the at-tributing to a chasm that "but" cover. He could be generous too, though was quite capable of sacrificing and everything to the gratification of self, yet, at times, the self to an amiable folly. At present he determined Nora L'Estrange should be his wife. She was the first man he had ever wished to marry and nothing should stand between him and the accomplishment of wishes.

In such a passion there is a tit of cruelty. Marsden would rather kill her with his own hand, than give her up to another.

Meantime, the wild animal within him slumbered in the sunshine of own hopes. Marsden talked with Nora, who had more color than usual, was charmingly bright. Winton was never mentioned, and all was merrily.

CHAPTER IX.

The last week of October saw nearly all the personages in this history assembled in town.

Nora L'Estrange was almost ashamed of the eager pleasure with which she hailed their removal to London. The change of scene, various objects of interest, the different occupations of town, contrasted with those of the country, roused and diverted her.

Beatrice and her attendant fraud were left with Winton's aunt, M. Atherley, who had invited them to stay with her in Oldbridge, in order that the young lady might have music lessons from the organist of the cathedral, and be preserved from disorganization of life in a London lodging, where she was to join her mother before Christmas.

Winton, as was expected, soon in his appearance, and then Marsden both bestowing a good deal of the spare time on the ladies of Brodale. So the days went speedily and pleasantly, with the help of galas and concerts by day, and theatres the evening. Nora flattered herself that by the careful cultivation of more frank friendliness of man toward Winton, she was killing warmer feelings in her heart, and any rate successfully masking the true state of affairs in that citadel.

Mrs. Ruthven, however, put in claim for a good deal of her tree's time and attention. She found it expedient to take up abode in the capital. The police of her little hope of recovering her property, but the preliminaries of her new purchases made her sense requisite.

"Have you seen Miss L'Estrange asked Mrs. Ruthven, one morn when Shirley had been admitted fore luncheon.

"No, I thought of calling, but not see what business I had to do."

"I wish you would! Why show you not?"

"I do not know. Mrs. L'Estrange is rather stand off."

"Pooh!" she returned with an expression of contempt. "Mrs. L'Estrange is nobody! They called her yesterday, but I was out. Shirley wish you would make love to Nora! It would not be a bad marriage you, and you need not marry her if you do not like."

"What is the real reason of your regard for my interests?"

"I want you to cut out Winton."

"I do not think there is anything to interfere with in that direction. The running at present is all Marsden's side."

Mrs. Ruthven stopped to pick her pocket-handkerchief before she plied, "Well, cut Marsden out. Winton should you not? You have been something of a favorite with women more experienced women than Nora L'Estrange, before this."

tion that drew Winton so cordially to Brookdale, to be so blind to the gentle charm of her step-mother's looks and voice and manner, saw it all now. How quietly Winton always was in speech to Helen, and how much more so he took of her than of her daughter. Yet across this canon would shoot puzzling gleams of memory, recalling significant words which might have been interpreted as indicative of a liking for herself, this not was but the exaggeration of own vain unhealthy imagination. "I am flattered," said Shirley with a self-satisfied smile. "Still I imagine—"

"Oh! I would give anything to see you safely married to Nora L'Estrange," she interrupted, clasping her hands together with a fervent air. "What a denouement the whole thing would be!" and she laughed—a cruel, mocking laugh.

"What whole thing?" asked Shirley with an angry look.

"My good friend, I am thinking of complications which do not enter your mind."

"I do not see how they can when I am in ignorance."

Here Mrs. Ruthven's courier entered with a note, which she took and glanced at.

"Let him come up," she said, and sat a moment in silence, twisting it with her small, pointed fingers.

"Am I in the way?" asked Shirley with some stiffness.

"No! no! you can stay," said Mrs. Ruthven carelessly, and as she spoke the detective, Waite, was shown in.

"So! you are back again?" she said. "Have you anything fresh?"

"Something, I—" he hesitated, and glanced at Shirley.

"Oh, you may speak! This gentleman, Captain Shirley," with a slight emphasis on the name, "was, you remember, at the ball when I was robbed, and knows all about it."

Waite bowed gravely.

"I have just come from Brussels," he said. "A report I heard at, no matter where, induced me to visit a merchant there, who it was said had some fine rubies for sale. They were certainly very fine, and were, I find, bought from a respectable-looking young man, of small stature and very dark complexion, who said he was a native of India. He spoke French very imperfectly. He had, he said, inherited the stones from an uncle. He stated he was a native of Pondicherry, and had offered the gems in Paris, but could not get his price. This surprised the jeweler, as he asked less than their value, which the purchaser, Vandersloot, Rue de la Montagne, gave him. After much trouble, I traced his man back to Ostend, and ascertained that a passenger answering to his description embarked on board the Dover steamboat about three weeks ago, and there I lost all trace!"

"But you must find it again," exclaimed Mrs. Ruthven, who had listened intently. "You know the reward I offered for the jewels themselves. I will double it if you enable me to punish the robber! Do you not think I am right?" she added with sudden startling vehemence to Shirley, who hesitated an instant and then replied:

"Certainly, Mrs. Ruthven, certainly. Such a miscreant deserves no mercy."

"From Pondicherry, did he say? Did he give any name?"

"No! I fancy the jeweler was too glad to get such a bargain, to make many inquiries."

"You do not intend to give up?" cried Mrs. Ruthven, eagerly.

"Certainly not, madame. These are the first tracks." He paused and gave a quick questioning glance at Mrs. Ruthven, who slightly bent her head. "Yes," he went on, "the first tracks I have hit on and I am determined not to give up till I have done all man can do to find the rascal and his accomplices, if he has any."

"I should imagine he had," said Shirley, who had risen, and going over to the fire, stirred it into a blaze. "A man would hardly attempt to hold a stroke single-handed!"

"It would be a good deal safer alone."

little morbid! I shall call at any rate, —early to-morrow." They inter- changed "good-mornings" and part- ed.

"I wonder the bereaved widow did not send for me?" mused Marsden. "Why does she hang on to that cad?" he walked slowly toward his club. "I don't fancy she cares for him; not now at least—I wish she did—or, for any one except myself. She might have him for a trustee— she may have whom she likes. I am well out of my difficulties, and I'll take deuced good care to keep clear of any more. The fact is I am very simple in my tastes, only I fell in with an extravagant set! I wish Mrs. Ruthven would take her departure—anywhere, even to another world. Has she made a will? Who has she left her money to? She has no relations? Suppose she made me her residuary legatee? That would be too comic! I wonder why she is so civil to Nora? She is always watching her. She is such a keen devil, she suspects I am in love with my charming cousin 'Ay' but she little knows how deeply! That girl has given me fresh youth and force, and invention. Nothing shall part us. But I must be cautious for a little longer then—then—"

So, with head erect, a delicious sense of success unlighting his spirit, Marsden strolled down Park Lane and along Piccadilly. Reaching his club he found a note from his sister, commanding—rather than invit- ing—him to dinner that day. Mars- den felt bound to obey—much to his annoyance.

Lady Dorrington was exceedingly formidable to him just then. She knew something of his life and em- barassments—and she suspected more. She had no hesitation in questioning him in the coolest and most embarrassing manner, more- over, it was exceedingly difficult to mislead her.

Marsden, however, prepared himself for the ordeal, and came up smiling, at seventy-fifty, with his pleas- antest, frankest manner.

"Well, Clifford, and what have you been doing with yourself since we parted?" asked Lady Dorrington, when dinner was over and they were left alone.

A great many things. It has been a beastly time altogether. I was over in Amsterdam, as you know, after these unlucky jewels. I was in great hopes of finding a few ton emphatically. "You know I never mince matters, and I can tell you I was in a horrid fright about this purchase, lest—well, lest the money for it should not be forthcoming in time."

"My dear sister, I am immensely flattered by your high opinion of your only brother," bowing ironically.

"That is all very well, Clifford, but I know you, and I know what temptation a large sum of money absolutely at your disposal must be. I dreaded the appointment of a new trustee and the discoveries he might make, that was one reason why I was so eager to press your marriage with Mrs. Ruthven. I am still anxious for it, but not for its immediate celebration."

"Isabelle," said Marsden, quietly, but in a tone of feeling, while he looked straight at her, his soft, dark blue eyes grave and reproachful, "I have been reckless, extravagant, everything I ought not to be, but to rob a woman, too, of whom I am, in a sense, the guardian—that is an infamy of which I am incapable." He was evidently a good deal moved. "I do not deserve such suspicions from you."

"Well, I am sure I hope not," cried Lady Dorrington, with a searching look, "I beg your pardon, but I confess I have been terribly uneasy since you paid off that mortgage of Green- wood's, in May."

"Ah! yes. I was wonderfully lucky last spring. I won a few thou- sands at Monaco, and De Meudon's broker managed to double them several times over, in short, I never had such a chance before, so I was able to clear Greenwood and one or two other small things. You may well beg my pardon. If you believed me to be such a blackguard, how could you care enough about me to wish me married to any woman—to sacrifice any woman to me?"

"Clifford," cried Lady Dorrington, "I know that you have very little principle, yet I am fond of you. I have seen you grow up. You have always been nice and kind to me, and you are the last of our family. I want to see you well married and free from the awful temptation of money difficulties. If I have done you injustice I am very sorry."

"I can afford to forgive you, Isa- belle, but if you know how much I value your good opinion, you would not have wounded me as you have such a passion there is a tinge cruelty. Marsden would rather her with his own hand, than her up to another.

CHAPTER IX.

he last week of October saw nearly all the personages in this true ory assembled in town.

ora L'Estrange was almost amazed of the eager pleasure with which she hailed their removal to London. The change of scene, the new objects of interest, the different occupations of town, contrasted with those of the country, roused her diverted her.

eatrice and her attendant fraulein left with Winton's aunt, Mrs. Shirley, who had invited them to stay with her in Oldbridge, in order that the young lady might have no lessons from the organist of the cathedral, and be preserved from the organization of life in a Londoning, where she was to join her mother before Christmas.

Winton, as was expected, soon made his appearance, and then Marsden, bestowing a good deal of their time on the ladies of Brookside. So the days went speedily and pleasantly, with the help of galleries and concerts by day, and theatres in the evening. Nora flattered herself by the careful cultivation of the frank friendliness of manner toward Winton, she was killing out her feelings in her heart, and at the same time successfully masking the state of affairs in that weak delusion.

Mrs. Ruthven, however, put in her time for a good deal of her trust in time and attention. She also found it expedient to take up her abode in the capital. The police gave her little hope of recovering her lost property, but the preliminaries of new purchases made her present requisite.

Have you seen Miss L'Estrange?" asked Mrs. Ruthven, one morning when Shirley had been admitted to luncheon.

No, I thought of calling, but did not see what business I had to do.

I wish you would! Why should I not?"

I do not know. Mrs. L'Estrange rather stand off."

Pooh!" she returned with an expression of contempt. "Mrs. L'Estrange is nobody! They called here yesterday, but I was out. Shirley, I wish you would make love to Nora! I would not be a bad marriage for her, and you need not marry her if you do not like."

What is the real reason of your not for my interests?"

I want you to cut out Winton."

I do not think there is anything to interfere with in that direction. The running at present is all on Marsden's side."

Mrs. Ruthven stopped to pick up a pocket-handkerchief before she read, "Well, cut Marsden out. Why did you not? You have been doing of a favorite with women, and experienced women than Nora L'Estrange, before this."

and Ruthven, who signify bent her head. "Yes," he went on, "the first tracks I have hit on, and I am determined not to give up till I have done all man can do to find the rascal and his accomplices, if he has any."

"I should imagine he had," said Shirley, who had risen, and going over to the fire, stirred it into a blaze. "A man would hardly attempt so bold a stroke single-handed."

"It would be a good deal safer alone."

"Then what do you propose to do next?"

"I have not yet quite decided, sir," replied the detective dryly. "Moreover, I never speak of my plans. As there is no time to be lost in trying to find the trail, I shall wish you good-morning, madame, and keep you informed of my movements."

"A shrewd fellow," said Shirley, "but I fear his chances are but scanty of tracking this darky."

"He will do it yet," returned Mrs. Ruthven, with gloomy conviction, and fell into such persistent silence, that, finding it impossible to rouse her, Shirley, himself irritated and uneasy, bid her good-morning.

The next afternoon Marsden, who had been gratifying his lawyer by detailing the particulars of a successful speculation he had made on the Paris Bourse through the guidance of a friend, drove away to Southwick Street, having sent some flowers to keep Mrs. Ruthven quiet.

Somewhat to his discomfiture—for he always suspected that Shirley was more or less a spy—that gentleman was in the act of leaving his card as he went up the steps.

The ladies were "out, driving, with Mr. Winton," said the highly respectable ex-butler, who opened the door.

"When do you expect them in?" asked Marsden.

"Can't say, sir. Not till late, anyway."

Marsden then left his card, and, turning, walked a few paces with Shirley.

"So Lady Dorrington is in town," said the latter, after their first exchange of greetings.

"Indeed! I have not heard from her."

"I don't think I was mistaken. I saw her drive up to Mrs. Ruthven's hotel as I left this morning."

"I did not think she would be up just yet. How is Mrs. Ruthven to-day?"

"No great things," said Shirley. "This unfortunate business has taken such a hold on her. I believe she suspects every soul that comes near her. She ought to get away, among new scenes and people. It is a pity she has bought this villa."

"It is not a bad investment. She might sell it any day for a thousand or so more than she gave. The owner was very hard up for ready money."

"Ah! that's always the way—those that have, to them shall be given. And our charming friend has a keen appreciation of a bargain!"

"Of course—it is in her blood," said Marsden, laughing. "Now I must go and look after this sister of mine. Shall you see Mrs. Ruthven to-day?"

"I hope to do so. She fancies she has some faint clew to the ruffian that robbed her. I don't believe it myself. It seems there is some suspicion about a half-caste, from Pondicherry. I scarcely know what," and Shirley pulled himself up. "I avoid the subject with her now."

"We can not wonder if she is a

Marsden, however, prepared himself for the ordeal, and "came up smiling" at seven-thirty, with his pleasantest, frankest manner.

"A great many things. It has been a beastly time altogether. I was over in Amsterdam, as you know, after these unlucky jewels. I was in great hopes of finding a clew there, but it's no use. Mrs. Ruthven will never see them again. Then I went to Paris, to see De Meudon. He was awfully ill, poor fellow—gastric fever or some such thing. I spent a few days with him at his villa, and had a talk with some of the principal jewelers in Paris, but could find nothing. One of them suggested the stones might have gone to New York or Sydney. Then I came over here to attend to Mrs. Ruthven's business—she was in such a violent hurry about that villa."

"Is the affair finished, and the money paid down?" sharply.

"Yes," returned Marsden, looking up surprised. "Why do you ask?"

"Thank God!" said Lady Dorrington.

If I have done you injustice I am very sorry."

"I can afford to forgive you, Isabelle, but if you knew how much I value your good opinion you would not have wounded me as you have done."

Lady Dorrington, quite melted, held out her hand, and Marsden rose, took it, and kissed her brow.

"Now," she resumed cheerfully, after a moment's silence, "let us talk seriously of your marriage."

"Must I marry?"

"Why, yes; of course. It is a special intervention of Providence that sent Mrs. Ruthven in your way—and such an attractive woman too."

"Yes, she does her best in that line."

Modernize your Kitchen

One by one the bugbears of housekeeping are being put to rout through the instrumentality of gas. The modern kitchen—which means the all-gas kitchen—is now a recognized part of the up-to-date home. The all-gas kitchen lightens labor. It means a clean, wholesome, sanitary kitchen, as there is no coal dust or ashes to be spread around, and it becomes a real pleasure to work in it. Every housewife desires to cook and heat water in the most economical way, in the quickest, most dependable way, with the least possible work.

The All-Gas way is the solution to the problem.

The hot weather is here now and if you want a cool, comfortable kitchen this summer come and select your Gas Range and Water Heater now. We have ranges at all prices.

FEEDING YOUNG DAIRY CALVES

It will depend somewhat on the breed of cattle as to the food for the first month of the calf's life, writes a correspondent of the Rural New Yorker. If it is a Holstein I would feed it mother's milk direct from the cow. If it is a Jersey or Guernsey I would reduce the milk with part warm water to bring it down to something like 3 per cent milk. It is better to use water instead of skimmilk to reduce the whole milk, because the other solids usually follow the fat closely in rich milk, and therefore if skimmilk were added we would have too much protein, which would derange the digestive system just as quickly as too much fat.

After the calf is about a month old I would begin to substitute skimmilk for the whole milk, a little at first, but in a couple of weeks get her on to all skimmilk. When we begin substituting for skimmilk we begin to place a little oilmeal at each feed. The calf may have all she will eat of this grain ration fed dry, but it is poor practice to place grain in the milk for the calf. It is decidedly better for it to eat it dry, so that the digestive juices of the mouth and stomach may have a chance to act.

The clover and timothy hay should be within reach of the calf all the while, but I think corn stover would be of very little value the first six months of the calf's life.

On the other hand, it is not best to raise the calves on a too concentrated feed. The dairy cow ought to be able to get a good share of her food in the form of roughage to make her a profitable animal, and to do this she must of course have a good storage capacity. My rule is to give the calf enough grain to keep her in good flesh and fine thrifty condition, after which give her all the roughage she will eat.

KEEP THE GOOD BOAR.

Mature Sire Produces Large Litters and Strong Pigs.

I find that it is not best to let the boar run with the rest of the herd. There are good reasons why this should not be done, writes a New York farmer in the American Cultivator. If you are to control the time of farrowing and want to control the boar it can be done when he is kept by himself.

It is too common a practice to sell the boar when the season is over rather than keeping him for future purposes, depending upon getting another when he is needed. This is a ruinous practice and is largely the cause of so many small litters and weak boned pigs. From years of experience I have learned it is best to get a good boar and keep him for a few years. As he matures his pigs will be stronger and more in number.

Have a small yard of grass if possible, hog tight and away from the sows so that he will not be worried. A quarter of an acre will afford plenty of exercise in the open air. When grass is not available give him cut clover or any other good green feed that he will eat.

Feed sparingly of fattening foods, but supply him with food that will keep him growing if not fully developed. Mill stuff, skimmed milk, clover, alfalfa or anything that furnishes protein is advisable. And at all times keep a supply of ashes, salt and charcoal where he can obtain it at will, and it will do much toward keeping him in good health.

Foot Rot in Sheep.

Foot rot is caused by sheep being housed in wet, filthy stables and running in flat, wet fields. It can be cured by cutting all the diseased part of the hoof away with a sharp knife and washing the exposed part of the hoof with sheep dip, full strength, and then applying blue vitriol mixed with a little grease. After doing this work thoroughly put the sheep in a clean, dry stable, well bedded with straw, and leave it in for about one day before turning out. If given two or three thorough treatments in this way it will cure them if kept out of wet, filthy stables.

ROBBING THE COAL PILE.

Smoke That Goes Up the Chimney is Fuel Thrown Away.

For the benefit of any one who may not see the analogy between a robbed coal pile and a smoking chimney it may be briefly and simply explained.

The visible part in smoke is nearly all carbon, either as soot or cinder, and carbon is the principal combustible part of coal—i. e., the useful part, the part capable of yielding heat. Carbon completely burned forms an invisible gas, carbon dioxide; therefore whenever the gases from a stack show black they contain carbon, which indicates that complete combustion has not taken place in the boiler furnace.

In other words, all of the available heat in the coal has not been realized. It is the same as though the corresponding part of the coal fed into the furnace had been thrown away, for, although it has passed through the furnace, it has been thrown away up the stack beyond recovery. Is this, then, so very different from robbing the coal pile?

The owner who through ignorance allows conditions to exist which are not favorable to the most economical operation of his boiler furnaces, although he is unwittingly robbing himself, is nevertheless stealing from his own coal pile.—Power.

CURIOUS PIPEFISH.

The Males Have Pockets in Which They Carry Their Young.

The kangaroo has always seemed to have the monopoly of that convenient way of carrying its babies in a pouch, but it has been discovered that a fish has the same useful receptacle, which it uses for the same purpose. The pipefish, as it is called from the length of its jaws, has a pocket on the under side of its body nearly half its length. It is found in the male species only and is the only part of its body which is unprotected by large flat plates, which take the place of scales in its protective armor.

If a pipefish is taken from the water and its little ones shaken out of the pouch back into the water they always seem either unable or disinclined to run away. But if the father is placed in the water again all the small fish immediately swim back into the pouch. These curious little creatures have prehensile tails, which they use to hold on to the seaweed to protect themselves from being carried away by the tide. The pipefish is similar to the small eel, being about a foot in length and an inch in thickness. But, unlike the eel, it has a very long jaw and the peculiar defensive armor already mentioned.—New York Sun.

Facts Versus Fancies.

"Real lovers of poetry," said Mr. Le Gallienne, "are unfortunately becoming rare. Too many people nowadays are like the judge.

THE ART OF IDLE

It is a Part of the Indolent of the Leisurely Turk.

WHERE SITTING IS EXERCISE

In the Orient the Placid Natives regard What We Would Call Loafing as a Mark of Respectability—A La Caille on the Golden Horn.

One of the first words in the Turkish language that I learned to recognize was kyef or knif. Making kyef was a very common occupation, judging from the number of times that I heard the word used. The dictionary definition of kyef is "health," "pleasure." He and pleasure are not always synonymous, but they seemed to be in case, for people who said they were making kyef always looked happy and healthy.

To the average American the word represented by the word kyef is as foreign as the word itself. It could not possibly make kyef at a ball game or a horse race or auto racing up to the limit of police regulations. One thing soon becomes evident to the scientific investigator of kyef: Whatever it may be, kyef is not without haste, without excitement; above all things, without noise.

Leisure, idling if you like, has been reduced to a fine art in the Orient. There is no place in the world where doing nothing is so respectable. A bodied man sits unblushingly at midday in a coffee house drinking number cups of strong, black coffee, smoking a nargile and staring at a chessboard for hours at a time. Loafing was called in America; in Italy, dolce far niente in Turkey, making kyef.

The oriental is slow and easy in amusements. He lingers over his pleasures, making them last as long as possible. None too fond of exerting himself, most of his exercise is taken in sitting still. The Turkish verb which means "sit," is much used in word and in action. They sit over a cup of coffee in an out of door; they sit under a tree smoking a cigarette, they sit for four hours making you a visit, and they may sit the long day out in a grassy field or on the banks of a stream doing nothing at all.

The Turks are fond of outdoors. One is not surprised. The highest point of Constantinople is Tchamlidja, a flat stands a few miles back from Scutari landing on the Asiatic side. The view from this hill is one which beauty casts a spell that lasts as long as memory lasts. "See Naples and die" runs the old saying, but do not die here you have seen Constantinople from Tchamlidja.

There are many open fields in Constantinople to which the people resort on high days and holidays. The brilliant colors of the native dress stand out against the greenest grass and the bluest blue of the native background. And everywhere the glistening sheen of water, the silvery, cursive surface of the Marmora stretch away in the distance and the winding Bosphorus at our feet. This is a hush about a Turkish hill gathering which is always like a

The Jersey cow is sometimes referred to as the little giant of the dairy. As a butter producer she is hard to equal, especially when cost of maintenance is reckoned. At the present time a Guernsey cow holds the palm for butter, while a Holstein is second. The Jerseys, however, are not far behind. The Jersey cow shown is owned by the Delaware experiment station. She has a record of 75.8 pounds of butter in thirty days.

The Calf's Bottle.

It will kill a baby to feed it constantly out of a dirty milk bottle. Why should a different effect be looked for from feeding a calf constantly from dirty milk vessels? It is hard to see where there is any essential difference.

"Oh, pa, my Harold is so handsome he is a perfect picture!"

"That's all right, but you let him know that when I stamp my feet upstairs he's to get busy and be a moving picture."

Kindness of the Boss.

Little Tommy, who was about knee high to a half pint, was employed by a busy broker. One afternoon the broker was sitting at his desk trying to collect his thoughts as well as some coin when he suddenly looked up and signaled Tommy to draw near.

"Tommy," said the boss, digging down into his jeans, "here's a fifty cent chunk of silver. Take it and hustle off to some vaudeville show."

"Thank you very much, sir," gratefully responded Tommy, freezing fast to the coin. "That's what I call being some good to a poor kid."

"Don't think that I'm being good to you," was the quick rejoinder of the boss. "I want you to learn a new tune. I can't stand the one you've been whistling for two months any longer."—Exchange.

Water Power.

Few would expect to find any connection between a modern hydroelectric plant and a prayer. The connection is indeed remote, but not undiscoverable. The first application of water power to mechanical purposes was made by Buddhist priests when they employed the energy of running streams to the work of turning prayer wheels. That, then, may be said to constitute the origin of the application of water power to perform man's labors, the foreshadowing of the great industrial development now in progress for the harnessing of the world's waterfalls, rivers and streams.

Sure of Herself.

"Do you think," asked the widower, "you could learn to love my children as you would if they were your own?"

"Oh, yes," replied the anxious maiden. "I think I should care more for them really than if they were my own, because I shouldn't have to worry so much about them if they got hurt or were sick."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Not.

"Shall we marry, darling, or shall we knot?" was the short and witty line an ardent lover dispatched to the idol of his heart.

But, where the strangeness of the matter comes in, the girl replied: "I shall not. You may do as you please."

Malicious Hint.

"Can you tell me where I am most likely to get a good collection of fairy tales?"

"Ask any married man."—Baltimore American.

Rude Boy.

Miss Flirt—Jack told me last night that I was his very life. Her Brother—Jack will soon find out how uncertain life is.—Boston Transcript.

There are many open fields in about Constantinople to which the people resort on high days and holidays the brilliant colors of the native dr standing out against the greenest grass and the bluest blue of the natural background. And everywhere the dazzling sheen of water, the silvery, ca surface of the Marmora stretch away in the distance and the winding Bosphorus at our feet. This is a hush about a Turkish holiday gathering which is always like a Sunday. Calques glide noiselessly by, people sit in groups or saunter about the shore, like the figures in a picture everybody making kiyef in his own way.

One of the popular resorts for great numbers of people is the Sweet Waters of Europe, a small stream of fresh water flowing into the upper part of the Golden Horn. The best and easiest way to reach this place, the strange is told, is by rowboat up the Golden Horn. This "best and easiest" way, however, a bit trying to the nervous Galata bridge, from which the boat leaves, is the busiest spot in Constantinople. You are jostled from before a behind, screamed at in all the languages you ever heard of and frightened nearly to death before you get down the rickety little stairway leading to the landing. Nothing can really happen to you, but you do not know that until afterward. If you should fall into the water you would be promptly fished out by friendly hands and a Mashallah! in all the tones of the chromatic scale. Down below, you are warned within an inch of your life about all the things you must not do in the calque. A calque is a small rowboat, the daintiest, most graceful little craft in the world, but it was made to tip over.

If you get away from the landing without being spilled out into the water you breathe one sigh of relief but not more than one, for the Golden Horn is very narrow and very busy and any moment you may look up the prow of a steamer bearing down upon you at full speed. Behind you and to the right of you, and to the left of you, are clumsy freight boats manned by scolding boatmen. And just here one of your oarsmen does what he has forbidden you to do—stands in his place. Wildly gesticulating, he scolds back in picturesque Turkish a careless steersman who has nearly tipped you over. After you have had this experience a few times and have escaped with your life you cease to mind it.

Quiet comes at last, and long, smooth stretches of shining water. The motion of a calque is perfect. It glides over the water with no effort at all. The very light of the eastern sun, the magic touch of the soft south wind, the voice of the muezzin calling to prayer from the minaret in the distance charm you into the land of the lotus. Grace Fleming Van Sweringen in New York Tribune.

Not Good at Riddles.

A lawyer was questioning a negligent, a widow, the other day about her history. "My history," she replied, "is simplicity itself. My first was the happiness of my life, my second was goodness itself, my third—" "Excuse me, madam," interrupted the attorney, "but really we aren't here to guess charades."

The Parting.

Little Eva brought a comb and brush to her mother and said: "Mamma, please make a pathway in my hair."

Concrete Adopted as Road Standard

WAYNE COUNTY, MICHIGAN, WHERE nearly one hundred miles of Concrete Roads have been built in the past six years, during which time nearly every method of road construction has been tested, now comes out flat-footed and adopts concrete as the road standard.

The story is best told in the following paragraph which has been taken from the latest report of the Board of County Road Commissioners of Wayne County, Michigan.

"With the completion of Plymouth Road, we have abandoned every other form of construction and have adopted concrete as our standard. We feel that our experience of the past six years warrants us in arriving at this determination, based on its general satisfactoriness and its annual cost as compared with other forms of construction. In addition to the economy in hauling, the pleasure in driving and touring, and the increase in land valuation, the concrete roads of Wayne County have been the means of bringing tens of thousands of dollars to this locality."

Concrete roads will benefit any locality proportionately as they have benefited Wayne County, Michigan.

The fullest detailed information about concrete roads will be sent to anyone interested, without cost or obligation. Address:

Health and pleasure are not always synonymous, but they seemed to be in this use, for people who said they had been making kyef always looked both happy and healthy.

To the average American the idea presented by the word kyef is about as foreign as the word itself. You could not possibly make kyef at a football game or a horse race or automotoring up to the limit of police regulations. One thing soon becomes evident to the scientific investigator of kyef. Whatever it may be, kyef is made without haste, without excitement and, above all things, without noise.

Leisure, idling if you like, has been reduced to a fine art in the Orient. There is no place in the world where doing nothing is so respectable. Able-bodied men sit unblushingly at midday at a coffee house drinking numberless cups of strong, black coffee, smoking a cigarette and staring at a chessboard for hours at a time. Loafing we call it in America; in Italy, dolce far niente; in Turkey, making kyef.

The Oriental is slow and easy in his movements. He lingers over his pleasures, making them last as long as possible. None too fond of exerting himself, most of his exercise is taken sitting still. The Turkish verb otur, which means "sit," is much used both in word and in action. They sit over a cup of coffee in an out of door cafe, they sit under a tree smoking a cigarette, they sit for four hours making a visit, and they may sit the living day out in a grassy field or on the banks of a stream doing nothing at all. The Turks are fond of outdoors. And it is not surprising. The highest point in Constantinople is Tebamildja, a hill that stands a few miles back from the Bosphorus landing on the Asiatic side. The view from this hill is one whose beauty casts a spell that lasts as long as memory lasts. "See Naples and die" was the old saying, but do not die before you have seen Constantinople from Tebamildja.

There are many open fields in and about Constantinople to which the people resort on high days and holidays, the brilliant colors of the native dress standing out against the greenest green of the blindest blue of the natural background. And everywhere the dazzling sheen of water, the silvery, calm surface of the Marmora stretching away in the distance and the blue winding Bosphorus at our feet. There is a hush about a Turkish holiday, a hush which is always like a Sunday. Caiques glide noiselessly by, peo-

RINGS OF AIR.

How to Blow Out a Lighted Candle Twelve Feet Away.

The distance from which an average man can blow out a candle rarely exceeds three feet. If he is an adept at blowing smoke rings, however, a candle may be extinguished at twelve feet. Of course the smoke isn't necessary. An ordinary air ring will do and has the added advantage of being invisible. Simply pucker the mouth as you would to blow a smoke ring and expel air in a quick, sharp manner. It takes a good deal of practice to do it!

An easier way to show the effect if one is doubtful is to place a sheet of cloth or canvas over the open side of a box otherwise closed, making a small, round hole in another side. Then tap in a sharp manner on the canvas and invisible air rings will be produced. If the hole is pointed at a person's face and the rings are made he will feel them as they strike his face. Only a few trials are necessary to extinguish a candle at twelve feet. To render the rings visible a smudge may be burned in the box, or a small dish of ammonia may be placed side by side with a small dish of hydrochloric acid, the combined fumes of these liquids making a dense smoke.

The explanation why one can put out the candle at twelve feet is that the energy of expulsion is conserved and practically all retained in the smoke ring, while a simple blowing has to set in motion a whole stream of air and is therefore wasteful. —Chicago Record-Herald.

BOTH SIGNED THE NOTE.

A Financial Formality That Puzzled Both Clay and Webster.

The men in official Washington seem to have less of a halo about them than in the good old days, when the towering form of Webster or Henry Clay would attract more attention on Pennsylvania avenue than a brass band or a tango dancer in 1914. In a bank the other day I saw a note indorsed jointly by Henry Clay and Daniel Webster. The story is told that Clay asked Webster to indorse a note with him for $500.

"All right," said the studious and thoughtful Webster, "I'll do so, Clay, if you'll make it $1,000 and give me half." Clay agreed to the compact, and the two set out for Banker Riggs, signed the note with due solemnity and secured the proceeds. As they swung across the threshold out again on the avenue and divided the money Webster in his ponderous voice remarked to Clay, "Henry, why do you suppose Mr. Riggs wanted our names on that note?"

"It baffles me, Daniel," responded Clay. "Perhaps he desired some memento to hand down to posterity, for I cannot at this moment conceive how it is going to be paid for the present generation."

The canceled note is today a valued souvenir, worth many times its face, because of the illustrious signers.—Joe Mitchell Chapple in National Magazine.

HINTS FOR HOME GARDENERS.

Never plant a seed deeper than four times its size. Always look carefully at the seed.

Pulverize the soil. Try using an old kitchen strainer or buy a small sieve.

Press the soil firmly with a thin board.

Water lightly with the finest of sprinkling cans. Don't use the hose.

Don't sow if a rain is coming up, but if one does come cover seeds with newspapers.

Should the sun be very hot cover seeds and baby plants with newspapers, but be sure to remove them before sundown.

In case of a cold snap cover overnight with papers. Twigs or small stones will hold papers down.

Sow seed evenly, and don't be afraid to thin out when the young plants are about two inches high.

PRACTICAL ACCESSORIES.

Trifles That Add to the Convenience of the Summer Table.

Convenient table accessories for the summer season are illustrated here. The asparagus dish of fancy china has a stand which renders it easy to handle. These asparagus tongs make it really possible to serve the vegetable without breaking.

The lemonade set illustrated has a pitcher supplied with a nickel cover.

ASPARAGUS DISH AND LEMONADE SET.

so that exploring insects may be kept out when the beverage is served on the lawn or porch. It may be added that the lemonade retains its coolness longer in these covered vessels than in open ones. The heavy glass tray with handles may be easily kept clean and is not affected by acid should the lemonade be spilled upon it.

Very practical and dainty are the newest designs in summer luncheon sets. Of heavy linen or crash in putty or natural shades, the edges of the various pieces are finished with small scallops in Chinese blue, Nile green, old rose or vandyke brown, the four shades that best accord with the usual dining room decorations and with almost any of the oriental potteries.

These new sets consist of a center mat of twenty-four inch circumference and a dozen each of plate and tumbler mats, while in extra pieces in matching colors and designs come long scarfs for the sideboard.

The value of the luncheon set is obvi-

AFRAID SHE WAS DYING

Suffered Terribly Until She Took "Fruit-a-tives"

ST. JEAN DE MATHA, JAN. 27th, 1914.

"After suffering for a long time with Dyspepsia, I have been cured by 'Fruit-a-tives'. I suffered so much that I would not dare eat for I was afraid of dying. Five years ago, I received samples of 'Fruit-a-tives'. I did not wish to try them for I had little confidence in them but, seeing my husband's anxiety, I decided to do so and at once I felt relief. Then I sent for three boxes and I kept improving until I was cured. While sick, I lost several pounds, but after taking 'Fruit-a-tives', I quickly regained what I had lost. Now I eat, sleep and digest well—in a word, I am completely cured, thanks to 'Fruit-a-tives'.

SHOE POLISHER.

Homemade Article That Will Keep the Boots Spic and Span.

It is not always convenient to carry a box of polish in one's traveling bag, but a "strip polisher," which can neither upset nor smudge the contents of one's bag, answers the purpose quite as well for a short journey. In fact, it's not a bad thing to have tucked in the corner of one's bedroom shoe box at home.

To make the polisher take a strip of velvet or plush about four inches wide and eighteen inches long and attach to the ends two little sticks, round or square, about a half inch thick. The sticks should be given a coat of glue and then rolled into each end of the cloth sufficiently to cover the wood with the material.

This is to keep the sticks from slipping out of the open ends.

Then sew the sticks in tightly to keep them from being pulled out when the polisher is being used. Have the shoes polished before leaving home, and for several days one can bring them to a bright polish by simply rubbing the polisher back and forth over them. For polishing the backs and heels, place the strip back of the shoe and rub it briskly back and forth by pulling first one handle and then the other toward you—just as the shoe-black does. The right side of the velvet or plush should always, of course, be next the shoe.

CUCUMBER SANDWICHES.

Take one cupful of cream, whipped stiff; one small cucumber, cut very fine; three teaspoonfuls of powdered gelatin, salt to taste, also paprika to taste, five tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Soak on high days and holidays, the brilliant colors of the native dress standing out against the greenest green and the bluest blue of the natural background. And everywhere the dazzling sheen of water, the silvery, calm surface of the Marmora stretching away in the distance and the blue finding Bosphorus at our feet. There is a hush about a Turkish holiday gathering which is always like a Sunday. Calques glide noiselessly by, people sit in groups or saunter about on the shore, like the figures in a picture, everybody making kyeft in his own way. One of the popular resorts for great numbers of people is the Sweet Waters of Europe, a small stream of fresh water flowing into the upper part of the Golden Horn. The best and easiest way to reach this place, the stranger is told, is by rowboat up the Golden Horn. This "best and easiest" way is, however, a bit trying to the nerves. A alata bridge, from which the boats are, is the busiest spot in Constantinople. You are jostled from before and behind, screamed at in all the languages you ever heard of and frightened nearly to death before you get down the rickety little stairway leading to the landing. Nothing can really happen to you, but you do not know that until afterward. If you should fall to the water you would be promptly shed out by friendly hands amid ashallahs! in all the tones of the aromatic scale. Down below, you are armed within an inch of your life about all the things you must not do—the calque. A calque is a small whorl, the faintest, most graceful little craft in the world, but it was made to tip over.

If you get away from the landing without being spilled out into the water you breathe one sigh of relief, it not more than one, for the Golden Horn is very narrow and very busy. At any moment you may look up at the prow of a steamer bearing down on you at full speed. Behind you, to the right of you, and to the left of you, are clumsy freight boats manned by scolding boatmen. And just as one of your oarsmen does what has forbidden you to do—stands up in his place. Wildly gesticulating, he holds back in picturesque Turkish at careless steersman who has nearly opened you over. After you have had his experience a few times and have escaped with your life you cease to mind it.

Quiet comes at last, and long, smooth stretches of shining water. The motion of a calque is perfect. It glides over the water with no effort at all. The silvery light of the eastern sun, the magenta touch of the soft south wind, the ice of the muezzin calling to prayer from the minaret in the distance—draw you into the land of the lotus.—ance Fleming Van Sweringen in New York Tribune.

Not Good at Riddles.

A lawyer was questioning a new widow, the other day about "history." "My history," she replied, "is simplicity itself. My first was happiness of my life, my second was goodness itself, my third—" "Excuse me, madam," interrupted the attorney, "but really we aren't here to guess charades."

souvenir, worth many times its face, because of the illustrious signers.—Joe Mitchell Chapple in National Magazine.

Twain's Rate.

Mark Twain went to just one automobile show in his life. He went with a Detroit friend. After he had been shown the cars and other sights the friend said: "Come on over here. The greatest salesman in the automobile business is working, and I want you to hear him."

They went to a place where the salesman was talking to a possible customer about the merits of his car. He was rattling outward so fast that Twain gasped.

"Sakes alive," said Twain in his slowest drawl, "if my publishers ever heard me talk as fast as that man does they wouldn't pay me 30 cents a word or even 2 cents. They'd make me produce words about a hundred for a nickel."—Saturday Evening Post.

Scandal.

How is it that the evil which men say spreads so widely and lasts so long, while our good, kind words don't seem somehow to take root and bear blossom? Is it that in the stony hearts of mankind these pretty flowers can't find a place to grow? Certain it is that scandal is good brisk talk, whereas praise of one's neighbor is by no means lively hearing. An acquaintance grilled, scored, derided and served with mustard and cayenne pepper excites the appetite, whereas a slice of cold friend with currant jelly is but a sickly, unrelishing meat.—Thackeray.

Well Acquainted.

An American girl was taking a Liverpool girl home to the States with her and toward the end of the journey remarked: "It is delightful to feel that one is so near home. We ought to visit Sandy Hook this afternoon."

"Shall we?" exclaimed her friend. "That will be nice. Don't tell me which one he is. I can always pick a Scotsman out of a crowd."—Chief Steward.

Strong Presumption.

Lawyer.—You say that the defendant ran his automobile into the show window of a millinery store; but that doesn't show he was intoxicated, does it? Officer.—Well, no; but when I arrested him he was trying on the hats!—New York Globe.

A Hard Case.

"His wife earns her own money." "Indeed! I did not know she was employed." "Oh, yes; hard at it all the time." "What does she do?" "Works him to give up."—New York Journal.

Wait is a hard word to the hungry.—German Proverb.

Knots in Harness.

To loosen knots in harness, straps, cords, ropes, or even shoestrings, hammer the knot on all sides with a mallet or a piece of wood, turning the strap or rope around, then dip in boiling water, holding it there a minute or two, according to size of knot to be loosened. Before doing so add a little soap to the water, then with a sharply pointed instrument pick the knot loose. It can often be done with the fingers. Knots that have been pulled in harness or ropes for months or years can be loosened readily.

scallops in chinese blue, nile green, old rose or vandyke brown, the four shades that best accord with the usual dining room decorations and with almost any of the oriental potteries.

These new sets consist of a center mat of twenty-four inch circumference and a dozen each of plate and tumbler mats, while in extra pieces in matching colors and designs come long scarfs for the sideboard.

The value of the luncheon set is obvious. It is an immense saving of laundry, since when an accident happens to one mat another may be substituted and the table drapery kept looking fresh for several days in succession.

LAUNDRY CABINET.

It Should Contain Stain Removers and Other Helps For Wash Day.

The careful and economical housewife who watches all the small outlays will have a small shelf or even a cabinet, no matter how roughly put together, in her laundry, where many helps may always be found. Oxalic acid to take out stains, a bottle of javelle water, a box of fine starch and one of cornstarch, some gum arabic, a bottle of vinegar and one of ammonia, besides the bluing, the wax and soda, should be there.

For ink stains and iron rust the oxalic acid crystals are dissolved and the spots moistened, left until the spot shows that it is fading and then well rinsed in several waters, as this, like javelle water, will eat holes in the fabric if left on too long.

When silk ribbons are to be laundered a little gum arabic dissolved to a thin mucilage will give them the stiffness and luster of new. Where colors are to be "set" in uncertain goods, vinegar and salt should be used in the water, and for stains from varnish or the usual furniture staining fluids the javelle water is invaluable.

The laundress must be taught how to use these things; otherwise economy will prove extravagance. She should be instructed that any white goods will stand the application of oxalic acid and the lime and salsoda of javelle water, but that either will surely take out the color from a printed fabric. Silks and satins will not stand these strong mediums.

STRAWBERRY WHIP.

To make a delicious light dessert use the whites of two eggs beaten stiff. Add one-half cupful of powdered sugar and one and one-quarter cupfuls of crushed strawberries. Beat again till stiff enough to hold its shape. The riper the strawberries the better will be the result. Serve soon after making.

Imaginary Whys of Celibacy.

Curious how when a man remains a bachelor people will speculate concerning his celibate state:

"Well, he has had an unfortunate affair some time or other. No man as attractive as he has gone this long without a tender memory to accompany him."

Of a woman:

"Funny she never married. Now, you'd think she'd be attractive to the men, wouldn't you?"—New York Sun.

Soak the gelatin in as little cold water as possible and dilute in as little hot water as possible. Mix together and set on ice to cool. Then spread on thin slices of bread.

Uncovered by the Wind.

"In the year 1793," says an old chronicle, "the waters of the Rio de la Plata were forced in the month of April by a most violent current of wind to the distance of ten leagues, so that the neighboring plains were entirely inundated, and the bed of the stream was left dry. A number of ships which had been sunk in the river for upward of thirty years were uncovered and, among others, an English vessel which was cast away in 1762. Several persons repaired to the bed of the river, on which they could walk without wetting their feet, and returned laden with silver and other riches, which had been long buried under the water. The phenomenon obtained for three days, at the end of which the wind ceased, and the water returned with great violence to its native bed."

A Good House.

Mrs. Allen was entertaining a caller one afternoon not long ago and was enthusiastically explaining the many advantages of concrete hollow block construction, of which the walls of her new home were built.

"The air spaces in the walls afford insulation against heat in summer and cold in winter," said Mrs. Allen. "And not only that, but such walls afford ventilation and insure a more healthful house."

The visitor nodded approval and paused reflectively for a moment, then replied:

"Well, our frame house must be quite as well built. Every night we lock the cat in the cellar and have to let her out of the attic in the morning."—Detroit Free Press.

Saving Trouble.

When Bobbie went to see his grandmother he was much interested in whatever went on in the kitchen. One day she said to him: "I'm going to make you a nice little pie in a saucer, all for yourself. Don't you think I'm pretty good to take so much trouble?"

Bobbie pondered. "Grandma," he said at length, "mother told me not to be a bother, and if it's going to be any trouble you can just as well make my pie regular size."—Exchange.

His Distinction.

"William, are you ever going to get matters so arranged that we can afford to have an automobile?"

"I don't expect that we can ever afford one, but I hope to get matters so arranged within a few months that we can have one."—Chicago Record-Herald.

TESTIMONIAL.

Tamworth, R. M. D. No. 1
July 11th, 1914.

To whom it may Concern :

This is to certify that George Dawson put in between eight and nine thousand tile for me last fall and they are working satisfactorily. He re-deemed land for me that never was of any use before, 'twas nothing but a bog. I cannot speak too highly of Mr. Dawson's little ditching machine, as I had two other men who called themselves practical ditchers undertake the job but on account of the sticky blue clay leave it, saying it couldn't be done with the spade. And then again our agricultural man brought the gentleman who runs the big ditching machine back to see this field and he said the work couldn't be done with his machine and I heard he said it couldn't be done at all. But thanks to Mr. Dawson, a man with the experience and staying qualities, one who isn't afraid to take off his coat and help do the work and one with his good judgment, I have a crop growing on this field that I can well be proud of.

I know there are thousands of acres of waste land in this county that need underdraining, and we farmers don't need to pay men to tell us that it pays to do the draining. What we want is a few men like Mr. Dawson who will take hold of the work and help it along.

The Late Mrs. Helen Price.

The death occurred on Tuesday morning at eleven o'clock, at the summer home of her son-in-law, O. V. Bartels, on Wolfe Island, of Helen M. Price, widow of the late Dr. R. B. Price. She was born in Bath seventy-two years ago. The cause of her death was heart trouble. She leaves to mourn her loss one sister, Mrs. W. Brvers, of Napanee; three brothers, Allan, of Napanee; Frank, of Toronto and C. V., of Evert, Michigan; two daughters, Mrs. O. V. Bartels, of Kingston, and Mrs. Charles Mills, of Chicago. The deceased was an Anglican in religion. The funeral was held at 10 o'clock Thursday morning from her late home, Alfred street, Kingston to Cataract cemetery. The service was conducted by Rev. R. S. Forneri, of St. Luke's church.

on the Battlefield, Niagara Falls, Canada.

JOHN H. JACKSON, C. E.,
Secretary.

R. W. GEARY,
President.

The program for the afternoon includes, besides addresses by His Honor Sir John M. Gibson, Lt.-Governor of Ontario, Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia and Defence, and other distinguished guests, a Military review, procession to the Battlefield, decoration of monuments and graves of those who fell in battle on both sides and exercises of a patriotic nature by the children of the city of Niagara Falls.

This should be a splendid time to visit the "Falls" and it is hoped that a good delegation from our society will be able to attend.

CLARENCE M. WARNER,
President,

Desbarats Newspaper Directory for 1914.

Newspaper facts are presented very clearly and fully in the Desbarats Newspaper Directory for 1914 just to hand. The book contains more than 332 pages, and is a useful addition not only to the advertisers' library but to that of any businessman. The Directory not only gives information concerning circulations of Canadian publications, their date of issue, size, publishers etc., but is quite a unique form of presenting a very complete gazetteer of Canada, giving statistical informations concerning places where newspapers are issued which are difficult to find elsewhere. The Desbarats Advertising Agency, Limited, will forward a copy for 35cts to anyone interested in advertising, who will make application to the publishers on his firm's stationery, mentioning his official capacity.

HAIR—HAIR—HAIR.

"Bald men do not miss this chance." Prof. Dorenwend, of Toronto, the noted hair-goods artist, known throughout the world, will be at the Paisley House, Napanee, on Wednesday, July 22nd, with a grand stock of gentlemen's hair, toupees and wigs, superior to anything manufactured in the world and without a doubt the finest and most natural productions in hair-constructions ever seen in Canada. This is a special visit to advertise his art hair-goods in human hair devices, that are now worn on over 250,000 heads. A demonstration will be given free to any bald gentleman. Bring your friends along and you will never regret investing in one. His goods are featherweight, protect the head from heat and cold, can be worn day and night and on all occasions and produce younger effect.

A Fine Jaunt.

M. B. Mills returned home on the 12th with his yacht, "Dolphin" from the Lake Yacht Racing Association Regatta, held at Prinny's Cove, on the 8th, 9th and 10th of last week. We notice the addition of a yellow and red flag to his string of trophies, denoting that he won first and second prize. This was somewhat of a surprise to his competitors as it was considered that the Dolphin was smart only in heavy weather, but contrary to expectations she finished first on all three days in bright weather and won after allowing two boats in her class over nineteen minutes each, over a ten mile course. The best race of the meet was between the "Dolphin" and the "Ontario" of Watertown. Though the Dolphin was six minutes late at the start (owing to a hole in the wind). She nearly caught the Ontario at the buoy, and there the race began. You could almost toss a biscuit from one boat to the other at any time until the finish. With Ontario leading almost to the line, Skipper Mills out-sailed his opponent and stole his wind and shot across the line just four seconds ahead, amid the loud applause from the crews of the assembled boats. Mr. Clarence Windover very ably assisted Mate Frank Mills before the mast, while the Skipper and Coon Priest attended the steering and the sheets. Before leaving for home the party caught some fine lake perch and seven black bass. There were over forty sail yachts in attendance at the regatta, besides a goodly number of power cabin cruisers and motor boats.

MEN WELL SATISFIED.

Speaking of his experience with cow testing for three years one farmer near St. Hyacinthe, Quebec, recently expressed himself as very well satisfied. He had good reason to be, for in June this year his 9 cows averaged 1,203 pounds of milk each, a total 10,830 pounds. Three years ago the average was only 823 pounds, the total only 7,411 pounds.

In other words his income from the nine cows was thirty-four dollars greater in one month this year.

Instances very similar to this may be found in every county where cow testing has been taken up intelligently. Near Listowel, Ontario, is a herd of 16 cows that gave on the average 2,700 pounds of milk more per cow than three years ago. The addition of four hundred and thirty-two dollars per year to one's income, without increasing the number of cows, is a substantial and tangible result of intelligent weighing and sampling.

Again at Wooler, Ontario, is a herd now giving 8,307 pounds of milk per cow, an increase of almost 3,000 pounds per cow.

Record forms for milk and feed, and a herd record book, will be supplied free on application to the dairy commissioner, Ottawa.

THIS TRAGIC LETTER—

How would you answer it?

Between the lines of this short letter you can read grim tragedy. If its appeal were made to you, personally, how would you answer it? Suppose you held the power to receive this poor woman or to turn her away, which would you do?

"Will you kindly give me information concerning admission of a very needy woman near me. Her husband is dead, and she is in consumption. She has two small children, at present in an orphan's home, as the mother is not able to care for them, and their only income is what an aged mother earns. They live in one small room."

It is easy to say, "Why, of course, I would offer relief, if it were in my power!"
 But, think! Are you sincere when you say that? Are you in earnest? Do you really want to help poor, suffering Con-sumptives? Then here is your chance to prove your sincerity.

Contributions to the Muskoka Free Hospital for Consumptives will be gratefully acknowledged by W. J. Gage, Chairman
 Executive Committee, 84 Spadina Avenue, or R. Dunbar, Secretary-Treasurer, 347
 King Street West, Toronto.
